or that has been for many generations, a question affecting the interests not only of the citizens of the United States, but of all of the inhabitants of the American continent, a matter in which all of its bearings looks large, and the consequence of which will be tremendous, is the question now before the American people, before the American congress, the question of the reciprocal commerce relations with the Dominion of Canada. It is not a new the senate, if called together to consider ion of Canada. It is not a new the senate, if called together to consider the Dominion of Canada. It is not a new question, the subject of our commercial relations with Canada. It is one that was dealt with in the very first treaty that the young republic made with Great Britain.

"The department of state was charged under the Payne tariff law with the duty of negotiating a fair trade arrangement with every nation of the world, and after having settled the matter, with many ter having settled the matter, with many ter having settled the matter, with many nations, our work was about finished, but nothing had yet been done with Canada. President Taft negotiated with Mr. Field Monday practically will be given over to a column and the concensus of the control of the cont ing regarding not only a desire to adjust the minor question arising under the Payne-Aldrich law, namely, the giving to the dominion the minimum tariff of that act, but also a desire to take up the questions. Monday practically will be given over to eligible, the Borah resolution could not be sidetracked on Tuesday, and Senator Lorimer will speak on Wednesday. Even though the McCall bill should be given act, but also a desire to take up the ques-tion of reciprocity. The result of those negotiations are now before the people. It was our endeavor, and we believe we succeeded in making an arrangement broad in scope, comprehensive in detail.
