Edmonton granny on safari

by Mary MacDonald

If you are like most of us, you probably think that life ends at 65, but for some people with guts and relatively good health, it just begins.

Sunset on the African plain..... the dust settles behind a herd of stampeding wild beasts..... a human form comes into shape, safari clad, camera in hand. Dr. Livingstone you presume?

No, but how about an Edmonton granny?

It may not be exactly the typical setting where you find most grandmas. While most of her gang were sitting home propped in front of the TV, mesmerized or knitting their last minutes away to the ticking of the clock, picture her striding across the Serengeti Plain of Tanzania! There she was, roving across Africa on a safari, haggling with the barterers in the markets, or trying out Swahili wishing everyone at breakfast "jambo".

Armed only with a camera, she sneaked close to some lions, and once disappeared from the knees down into a hidden post hole. Or picture her almost jumping out of her skin as an elephant trumpeted behind her back. It's a typical day for an average, everyday retired grandma.

Each day started off bright and early at 7 a.m. with at least a 500 mile jaunt ahead of them across the expanse of veldt.

"We drove through everything," says my granny friend, "just like a Sherman tank!" The ride was bumpy indeed, driving across the roadless veldt but she was not going to give in, although she was the senior member on the safari.

One elephant thought that he would try to discourage her. It seems this one bull felt it might be fun to play tag with the bus she was travelling on.

"I was sitting in the back seat and all I could see was this hug elephant with a big mouth charging us," says my friend. With the skillfull darting and dodging of the drivers, they avoided anything disasterous.

In the Serengeti game preserve (besides elephants) she saw thousands of Something to "cheer" about:

Now the glorious beer of Copenhagen is brewed right here in Canada. It comes to you fresh from the brewery. So it tastes even better than ever.
