

PENALTIES
(Con.)

- (1) or persons in any field of activity where the peace and security of the world may be endangered will be unable, at any time, either directly or indirectly, to use their influence, endeavours or resources, (if any) to repeat their efforts. This latter penalty is necessarily very severe and should never, under any circumstances, be moderated. We must remember the potential danger to mankind as a whole, which might result from the influence and actions of such transgressors. With such vital issues at stake, it would be, to say the least, unwise and unreasonable to take a second chance with such people. In this manner, an international check can be kept upon all industrial, financial, trade, etc., etc., organizations which may be international in scope and have branches and interests in several countries. This also has the effect of keeping in check any nations who, under the guise of legitimate trade organizations, would finance and/or aid otherwise in the establishment and maintenance of organizations and industries with a view to, and eventual, subversive activities.
- (j) Any nation making frivolous charges i.e. without foundation in fact, and of a mischeivous nature, shall, upon conviction, be declared an aggressor in the second degree and shall be subject to the ostracism penalty for a period of not less than one (1) month.
