

Thus the value of  $mv$  varies in simple proportion to the surface of the propeller, and in double proportion to the pitch and speed of rotation.

Does this indicate that great pitch and great speed of rotation, rather than great surface, is what is wanted in the propeller of a flying machine? A.G.B.

(To be continued).

-----000-----