BEFRIENDED MOOSE.

Train Crew Saw One Caught in a Wire Fence and Released It.

The crew of a special train enroute from Stellarton to Truro, one night last week in charge of Conductor Jim McDonald (Stellarton) noticed a moose caught in the railway fence at Campbells Siding.

When they returned the animal was still there, and they at once released it by loosing the wires. It was a cow moose about two years old. The poor brute was caught by one fore and one hind foot, and became quite exhausted by its efforts to free itself, and it was necessary to help it to its feet, but it soon recovered and sprang away into the forest.

It was a kindly humane act on the part of the Conductor and his crew.

ECONOMIZING ON SUN-BEAMS.

First Eskimo—What do you think of this daylight-saving plan?

Second Eskimo—We might try it and go to bed a couple of months earlier this year.

The present Hun drive may decide the fate of Germany. It cannot decide the fate of the Allies, for whatever the issue we will fight on, if it takes a 30 years war till the Germans are beaten, and his autocracy banished forever from this world.

JEWS AND THE OPPRESSED THEIR RACE.

Many Jews in America had little reason to sympathize with England, France, Italy and Russia at the outbreak of the war against the Teutonic powers. The memory of hideous wrongs suffered at the hands of Von Pleave and other tools of an autocratic Russian government were too recent.

It was true Prussian autocracy had plunged the world into war for political reasons best known to itself. A Jew could not see many good reasons why he should lend support to a cause which if successful, meant only the further aggrandizement of a brutal and cynical European power that had, for centuries, been the chief oppressor of the Semitic race.

But with the coming of the Russian revolution and the granting of equal rights to the Jews in Russia, followed by the entrance of the land of their adoption into the war against Prussianism, all was changed. The American Jew, with the enthusiasm of his race for justice and equal rights for all, cast in his lot unreservedly with the Allies and contributed his sons and his money to the cause of democracy. The Jew has a reputation of knowing a good thing when he sees it. The Jews in America know that the government has given them what they long had sought in vain in almost every European country—absolute freedom to live their own lives in their own way and to pursue without restriction the arts of peace, unmolested by hampering, much less oppressive legislation, directed at them as a race.

In America the Jews have prospered as in no other country, possibly excepting England, and nowhere have they been given the complete confidence of their neighbors, and their esteem and trust, as they have been in the United States.

Disraeli rose high in the Councils of the British Empire, as have others of his people since. Here in America, Jews have been given even more substantial proofs of public esteem and confidence. Only a year ago was Louis Rosenwald, elevated to the Supreme Bench. Today Julius Rosenwald, known not only at home but abroad for his remarkable business acumen and his munificent charities, handles weekly for the government millions of dollars of public funds, at his own discretion, and no man questions his absolute integrity. Instances of this sort could be multiplied, and they, in a measure, explain the enthusiasm of the Jewish people here for the cause of democracy in this world war. The Jews are only repaying, with their customary prodigality, the friendship shown them by a liberal government. But back of all this lies a deeper and nobler feeling, an aroused sense of indignation against an autocratic power that ruthlessly plunged the world into war to gratify selfish political ambitions. An autocratic power that today is carrying into the conquered portions of Russia a deeper distress and a more acute suffering than the Jewish people were forced to bear under the rule of the Czar and his creatures.

The conditions of the Jews in Poland were pitiful three and a half years ago; today they are frightful. The martyrdom of almost an entire nation was never before in the history of the world worked out under such heartrending circumstances and so brutally and with such cynicism.

The Jews in America want this stopped, and as they have so often before come to the succor of the oppressed with their sympathy and their goods, they now are responding magnificently, from the least to the greatest, with their blood and their money.

The Truro Red Cross society gratefully acknowledges $5.15 from the Beaver Brook School.

Britain, France and Italy are pledged to an independent Poland with access to the sea. That means that bit of Germany occupied by Poles will be part of this new Poland and that a good portion of East Prussia bordering on the Baltic will be taken from the Hun and given to Pole.

AT THE AWFUL FIGHT.

No such murderous fight has taken place for the whole course of the war as is now raging in France and Flanders. The enemy is perfectly indifferent in regard to the loss of members or the bloodshed in this offensive. The object is to win, no matter what the cost.

The comparatively small advance has been at an enormous cost and whole columns of pick troops have gone down before the galling French fire. The Germans are still in the midst of this offensive and it is expected the drive will soon be started in Flanders against the British.

If our allied forces can hold, as heretofore, the Hun is doomed, as no armies, however great, can stand depletion in battle, and yet keep up to fighting strength.

Never in history is there a record of patriots fighting as nobly, as gallantly and as bravely as the French "poilers" in this seething hill of battle. In places they used clubbed rifles, and, when the rifles were broken, they went at the Hun with their naked fists.

Denmark's first Rigsdag, assembled under the new constitution giving equal suffrage to men and women, was formally opened by King Christian in the new Christiansborg Palace, on the site of the old Palace, burned 34 years ago. Interest was added by the presence for the first time of the nine women members.
