FARM AND FIRESIDE.

Timely Hints Useful to the Farmer and His Household.

Economy on a farm should never be obtained by half-cultivating, but by good management and a good arrangement of labor. Where the farm is the only source of income, the amount paid in rent is a very considerable item and the farmer should always endeavor to get his rent reduced so much as possible, if he does not own his own farm.

In the case of a farm there are a few occupations in which there can be such constant leakage, and this occurs in small matters. While carefully looking after the large matters it is the small ones that should be most carefully watched. The good farmer must be a man of varied accomplishments and diversified knowledge. He must utilize his property for the purpose for which it is best adapted in order to secure the best results.

A very considerable amount of waste will occur through the use of improperly constructed buildings, or from a scarcity of them. For instance, coops should not be allowed to stand in yards where the water drips from the roofs without any system of drainage. The loss of heat and discomfort is not calculated to increase either the yield or the quality of the cow's milk, and the expenditure of a small amount of money with a little labor, so as to carry off the rainfall, would be amply repaid.

Every large farm should have its own weighbridge. This is just as necessary as a barn if a farmer wishes to have any idea, based upon his own knowledge, of the quantity and value of the products that he ships to market. Otherwise he is entirely dependent upon the buyers for accuracy, and the buyers interest is naturally not that of the seller. Again, in buying fertilizer, for instance, he will be able to know he is receiving proper weight on the farm. The cost of a weighbridge on a large farm will soon pay for itself and yield a good rate of interest on the investment besides giving the farmer the satisfaction of knowing whether he is receiving full value for his money or full money for his value.

In the cultivation of the land there is very often considerable waste. It can be overtilled, plowed too deeply or plowed out of season, which involves a repetition of the work. This is also often waste in the matter of seed, some soils needing not nearly so much as others, and here the farmer must study and judge for himself. In the purchase of fertilizers it is a waste of money to buy those that are not suited to the crop or soil for which they are intended. Again, in the purchase of feeds the cheapest in the end are those that are most economical. In fact, a few planks and properly repair the barn, than to be compelled to bury a valuable horse or cow that has died of pneumonia. Arrange all outside work carefully and systematically at night so as not to waste time in the morning. If you ought to be doing it, because of every farm time is money, and it is money that makes the mare go.

HOG VS. SHEEP RAISING.

The principle of successful hog raising are not to be despised. It can be practiced then as the means and methods of raising sheep. Every farmer knows the value of crowding pigs from birth to maturity. Every farmer knows that early maturity in a hog means quick money and less chance of loss by cholera and other diseases. Every farmer appreciates the characteristics of breeds, and chooses such as suit his own circumstances. On some farms hogs are expected to live on corn during their entire life, with more or less grazing, and some of the best in the country are raised in this way, which offers more in the way of exercise than food supplies. On other farms hogs are afforded coarse pastures, and are not fed corn in the summer time, but are expected to live, grow, and thrive on grass. Some hog raisers market their hog crop at eight to ten months old, while others practice the holding of hogs until they are fully grown—eighteen to twenty months old—before feeding to fatten.

Each of these systems of profitable raising of hogs depends much upon character of breeds. Feeding qualities, early maturity, hardy rustling qualities, etc., are each known to belong to certain breeds and types of hogs with reliable uniformity.

But with sheep such information is unsolicited—at least, not practiced—by the average farmer. They generally aim to push the pigs along with all they can eat and drink until harvest, and put them in stable fields, to be followed, by green corn, and as corn hardens, the feeding lot is resorted to for the finish. (This is about the hog raising formula in Illinois.) Now, how about the lambs? What are the practices of sheep raisers? While the problem of profitable hog raising has been learned, the problems of sheep husbandry have not been considered, outside of the way, as they should.

Hog raising and agriculture in the corn states are on parallel lines; sheep raising is not now, but will be at no very distant day. The tendencies are in that direction. All along the line of good farming shows a place that no other domestic animal can occupy. This is the problem in the sheep industry of this country and the world that is being studied, and must be solved before the highest results shall be obtained in agriculture or sheep raising. This is the reason some men are successful here and there all over the country. The lack of this attention to special selections and practices of breeds and managements is the cause of disappointment.—R. M. Bell in Farm and Fireside.

THE SHEEP INDUSTRY.

No line of agriculture fluctuates so quickly from a profitable industry to one of loss or from periods of depression to those of a good paying business as the sheep industry. The primary cause of this lies in the fact that the public interest is presented in the light of the scientific knowledge now possessed by the breeders.

High prices usually stimulate the rapid increase to the extent of over production which forces the unskilled husbandman, and those not well informed as to the cause of the depression and the unprofitableness of the poorly kept flocks, to quit the markets and to sacrifice what might be worked off in a high quality of mutton, if the herdsmen understood the methods

GRAB ROBBERS AT WORK.

Knoxton, November 14.—Newboro and vicinity is in a state of panic over the raids that are being made on the cemeteries by grave robbers. The country is filled up rapidly with vaults. Only the other day an old gentleman died and was buried. The body was exhumed and taken to Queen's college. Friends recovered it and there was a re-burial. But the dare-devils made another midnight excavation and stole it away again. This time it was not found. A family had buried the father in a field near the house and two sons are taking turns at night to guard the sacred place.

Rich, man and scratches of every kind, on human or animal, cured in 30 minutes by Woolford's Sanitary Lotion. Warranted by Davies, Staples & Co.
