The Yarmouth Murder Case.

Some Testimony Against Accused. Yarmouth, April 28. — (Canadian Press.)—That Clara Elizabeth Perry had conspired to injure her husband, the late Captain Perry, upwards of seven years ago, was the testimony given at this morning's session of the preliminary hearing in the charge of wilful murder, preferred against her following the violent death of her husband in his home on February 26 last, by Nathaniel Adams, bricklayer, of Yarmouth.

Rev. W. A. Beazons, of Dartmouth, another witness, testified that the defendant had been asked on one occasion by Captain Perry that if she had not disarranged the collar steps so as to cause him injury, who had?

Former Chief of Police Charles H. Babine told of hearing a body falling in the outer porch of the Perry home from an upstairs room in an experiment conducted by Detective Horace Kennedy, the day of the arrest.

It is hoped to conclude the preliminary examination this afternoon.

Interesting Evidence.

Nathaniel Adams, bricklayer, of Yarmouth, was the first witness called at this morning's session. He identified several wax impressions of keys, which, he said, had been given him by the defendant, some time previous to her separation from her husband, of about seven years ago.

He thought they were given him, he said, that keys might be made by means of which he could obtain access to the cellar stairs in the Perry home.

Mrs. Perry had suggested that he disarrange the stairs in order to cause injury to the captain. She had also asked him, at the time, if he could obtain dynamite for her and used the word "separator" in this connection. The defendant had told him that she and her husband were not getting along well together.

Cross-examined by Mr. Landry, counsel for the defense, the witness said that he had known Captain Perry for a great many years though never intimately. They were members of the same fraternity although belonging to different lodges. He had not had keys made, had not dislodged the cellar steps, had not inquired about dynamite, and had not advised Captain Perry of the conversation.

Mr. Landry: "This is a very important matter, Mr. Adams, that this conversation should have made as deep an impression on your mind as the keys made on this was. Did it?"

The witness: "It made no impression on my mind at all. I took little or no account of it at the time."

All the witness could recall of the conversation was the impression it left upon him. He took the wax impressions wrapped in linen as they were, put them away and never thought of them again, until Detective Horace Kennedy had asked him if they were in his possession, the day of the arrest.

Even then, he had not known whether or not these impressions were available, his house having been destroyed by fire. His wife, however, had produced them.

Even when the newspapers reported the evidence of the disarranged steps, the matter of the wax impressions had not occurred to him.

He had not told his wife or any living soul previous to the arrival of Detective Kennedy, of the conversation he had had with Mrs. Perry or for what purpose the impressions had come into his possession.

He had not cautioned Mrs. Perry against the design conveyed to him in the conversation referred to, and regarded as ridiculous the impression he received of the defendant's reference to dynamite and separation.

On the morning of the murder, he had visited the Perry home for the first time since the conversation of seven or more years back, and had sent word to Mrs. Perry through Mansfield, that he was prepared to help her in any way he could.

Prisoners Remanded.

Clara Elizabeth Perry and Mansfield Ross, charged respectively with the wilful murder of Captain George Perry, on February 26 last, and with being an accomplice after the fact, following the conclusion to-day of the crown's case against the former, were remanded until three o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

Spendary Magistrate Charles S. Pelton announcing that he then might be in a position to decide whether or not the evidence adduced justified his sending up the accused for trial.

Whether or not he would be in such position, he said, depended upon the despatch with which the evidence would be transcribed by the court stenographer.

By consent of counsel engaged, the evidence adduced in the case of Mrs. Perry will, if necessary, be made to apply to the case of Mansfield Ross, subject to any additional evidence that may be required to complete the court record.

The remand of the prisoners followed addresses by counsel for the defence, R. W. E. Landry, and W. J. O'Hearn, K.C., for the Crown.
