The accident occurred about 6.30 o.m., as the boy and four companions named Smith, McDonald, Finlayson and Routledge were playing near the wheels. None of the boys were employees, all being quite young and were merely playing in the colliery yard. The scene of the accident was at the borehole by which the endless haulage rope used in a part of No. 10 enters the mine. Although the coal through a shaft by cages, yet the endless haulage system is used in bringing the coal to the shaft bottom. Those ropes enter the engine house on the surface through a small borehole extending from the surface down to the mine.
