OVER 25,000 DIE THREE MONTHS

Government of India Has Not Given Up Attempt to Check the Plague.

London, June 19. - Mr. Brodrick, secetary of state for India, has directed the following reply to be sent to a correspondent who drew his attention to an allegation brought against the Government of India of concealing from the public the real extent of the plague in the Punjab: "I am directed by the secretary of state in council to say that in the onths of March, April, May, 1904, when plague was most virulent in the Punjab, the total number of deaths from the disease was, as stated, over 250,000. There is no concealment of the figures, as they are published every month in the official gazettes of the local government, and are reproduced in the Indian newspapers.

"It is expected that the disease will diminish, as in previous years, during the course of the next few months, but judging by past experiences, its recrudescence during the winter months is unfortunately only too probable. "It is not the case that in combating the plague the Government of India is without a policy. Every practicable neasure that gives prospects of success, and that it is not utterly opposed to the habits and sentiment of the people has been and will continue to b tried. In every district there are medical officers whose duty is to co-operate with the civil author in advising and assisting the people, while there are well equipped laboratories for research work, and for a preparation of prophylactic fluid. The plague research expedition, which has recently ent to India under the joint direction of the Royal Society and the Lister Institute, acting in communication with the Indian Government, should be regarded as strictly supplementall to the medical organization already existing in India, and not as superseding it. The umerical strength of the expedition has been fixed by the societies which control its operations, with reference partly to the nature of the investigaion, and partly to the assistance which he expedition will receive in India
