The Triple Tie CHAPTER XXIV.

Gordon Kelly held Mildred Deery in his embrace a full minute, maybe. Her head rested on his breast and she felt his heart beating like a triphammer. At last she sighed happily and, raising her head, she smiled faintly in his serious face.

"Gordon," she murmured, "won't you say something?"

Gordon gulped once or twice convulsively. He tried to talk, but his voice broke on the first syllable. He tried again.

"Mildred, dear," he said, hoarsely, "can it be you? I can't believe it. I have been thinking of you and only you for six long weeks. I tried to find you and—"

"How hard did you try?" Mildred interrupted. She released herself from his arms. She was beginning to recover herself.

"Why, Mildred, I called up your house just as soon as they would let me. I called up every day for more than a week and then every other day and then every three or four days and I always received the same answer. You had gone away and they didn't know where you were or when you would return. I did all I could. I couldn't move for some time and I—"

"And you finally stopped" calling up altogether. Well, I don't think you made much of an effort. Didn't it occur to you to fall up my father or my mother, if you were so much much interested?"

Oh, the perversity of women. If Mildred Deery were to confess it, her thoughts had been on Gordon Kelly all most constantly for the six weeks since last she had seen him. Here he was in flesh and blood standing before her, and she was now apparently trying to fret him.

"I don't know much about these things," he stammered. "What have I done, Mildred? I only—"

An interruption.

"I got him, Mildred! I got him!" yelled the voice of Elmer Shephard in the distance. "I knew there was a big fellow in there. Where are you, Mildred?"

They could hear him crashing through the underbrush. Mildred moved a few paces away from Gordon. Presently Elmer bounded over a boulder and came into view on the other side of the brook. He stopped short at seeing the stranger.

"Keep right on, Elmer, and we will meet you in the road and then we will go to the oaks and have luncheon," said Mildred. She had forgotten all about the "big" but now, mischievously enough, she welcomed his presence. Gordon, too, felt the tension relax. The lad, coming on the scene, would give him a breathing spell and allow him time to collect his wits that Mildred had so ruthlessly scattered.

Picking up her fishing tackle, Gordon assisted Mildred up the embankment that bordered the road. Elmer was there before them. He held a large fish by the gills on one finger and proudly displayed his catch.

"Elmer," said Mildred, "this is my friend, Mr. Kelly. We met in the most—"

"Gordon Kelly, Gee whizz!" exclaimed Elmer, jumping up and down in his excitement. He was a little fellow for his age, whole-souled and outspoken. Mildred laughed and so did Gordon.

"Are't you going to shake hands with Mr. Kelly?" asked Mildred, for Elmer, in the sensations of the moment had not seen Gordon's outstretched hand. The lad dropped the fish he held and put his small hand in that of the tall young man. There was only five years' difference in the ages of the two, yet one was a little boy and the other a full grown man.

"I am glad to meet you," said Gordon pleasantly. "But how did you know my first name?"

The Cat Out of the Bag.

"Oh, I read all about you in the papers and I have seen your picture dozens of times. Besides, Mildred and I have talked about you."

"Elmer!" exclaimed Mildred, blushing furiously.

"We did, too, just as we were starting out this morning. You know we did."

"You did the talking about Mr. Kelly if I'm not mistaken," returned Mildred.

"However, I guess there was no harm done and, as I'm getting hungry, I suggest we change the subject and have something to eat. Won't you join us, Mr. Kelly?"

"Thank you, but I'm afraid I have fallen into the ball players habit of two meals a day—a late breakfast and a heavy dinner at night."

"We will allow you to sit with us and watch us eat, then," said Mildred. "Or would you prefer to resume your fishing?"

"I guess not," laughed Gordon. He knew he would have to begin all over again with Mildred, but he felt sure of himself now. "I'll just gather up my rod and net, however," he added. "I had a fish nearly landed when I saw you, but I forgot all about him."

They were soon comfortably seated under a huge oak tree. Mildred, with a shy glance at Gordon, slipped on a short skirt down as far as she could lean back against the trunk and selecting a sandwich, she began to eat.

"Now, then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, an account of yourself," she said.

"What are you doing up here?"
