Racing Season Ended at Chicage.

There was a large atlendance on Saturday at the West Side track to witness the close of the racing season of 1888 in Chicago. The racing was good the favorities in most instances taking a place. In the special race, the betting looked suspicious against Jim B, the judges called Dalton, the jockey, up and cautioned him, but notwithstanding, they were constanting, and urging students, but not one was killed, though at first it was feared that Long, the jockey was she putting of the mained power of the track. Two accidents happened in the steeplechase, but no one was killed, though at first it was feared that Long, the jockey who attended him, said that he would soon revinced the horse lell at the second jump and rolled right over his jockey. If the Tax threw his rider, but he fortunately sustained no injuries.
