Mr. Tomes' Inaugural Address.

The following extracts from the Presidential address of Mr. Tomes, at the annual meeting of the British Dental Association, in Newcastle, will be read with interest:

"It seems to me that I cannot better employ the short time which I propose to occupy, than by a short review of the conditions of a dentist's life—of that which conduces to his success or failure, and of the manner in which these conditions react upon the man himself; and in the fulfilment of this task I hope that I shall not be thought to play the part of a too candid friend.

"As a united body—and of this union this Association is the visible sign—we are very young; counted in the years of a man's
