There is a curious sentence in one of Mivart's letters which illustrates a state of mind which would be glad to think exists nowhere outside of Dr. Mivart's head...

MEMORIAL TO MONSIGNOR KIRBY IN THE IRISH COLLEGE AT ROME.

We are indebted to the Rome correspondent of the Dublin Freeman's Journal, P. J. Connelley, for the following account of the above-mentioned event...

Such a thought as this might well have come to the minds of those who assisted this afternoon at the ceremony of inaugurating Monsignor Kirby in the Irish College at Rome...

He died on the 22nd of January, 1895, in the Order of Sancti, and among the students, with whom, after resigning the office of Rector, he still remained.

NOTES RESOURCES

A gentleman, just returned from South Africa, says: "I have a great fear that the English will be repulsed. You have no idea of the resources of the Boers..."

THE QUEEN'S JESTER.

The Queen sat boating thoughtlessly her great face up against the arm of the chair in which she sat. She was not a real Queen at all...

"I remember," said the man, gravely, "I do not suppose it was fair to Tommie, but he is so serious, and I didn't feel a bit serious myself. When you encouraged me, I just had to go on. Tommie had had any use for me since he told Tommie the next day he'd like to see the workings of that man's mind..."

"I never thought of it in that light," responded the Queen, "but I understand." And she clutched his words as a strange and novel thought in her heart.

On Saturday night and Sunday the High Mass of Requiem was sung in the presence of the Cardinal by Rev. Father Hildway, the Rev. Father Roder being deacon and one of the students subdeacon. The panegyric of the deceased was preached by the Rev. George Carter, of Hendon.

They stopped him a second, and the Queen, conscious of the international opportunity, with a flush on her cheek, had a tender light in her eyes...

DEATH OF THE REV. CHURCH BAMPFIELD.

With feelings of deep regret, which we know will be shared by many of our readers, we have to record the death of the Rev. Father Bampfield, which sad event occurred on the 23rd inst. at a residence in London...

He was 72 years of age at the time of his death, was the son of a naval doctor, and was born at St. John's Wood, London, shortly after the death of his father. He received his early education at school at "Tubridge" for its studies for that holy state, first at St. Edmund's College, Ware, and afterwards at Rome. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1859, and was appointed assistant priest at Stratford from whence he was transferred to Barnet, where he labored with zeal and devotion till his death.

OBDDURATE MEMORY.

Fairly crushed under the accumulating sense of his unworthiness, he was leaving her forever. "You will forget me!" he had faltered. "I don't know," she was sobbing. "I took the full course in mnemonics and memory culture at culture!"

body lay in state and large numbers of people, thus attended of course, for the last time on the face of him they had loved so well. On the day evening the remains were conveyed to the church, which was draped in black and placed of a catafalque in front of the high altar - "The Liberator."

A FORECAST.

In an editorial headed, "The South African War and the English Common Sense," the New York Sun says: "Would not the piece excited seem to sensible Englishmen ridiculously disproportionate to the advantages possibly to be gained at so fearful a cost?"

Unless, then, Buller is successful and Ladysmith is relieved, we look for a change in English judgment concerning the war. If Buller is driven to surrender, the conflict must take a new start and be of an indefinite and injurious duration, for which Great Britain could get no possible compensation for its sanguinary pursuit. It is a foolish war for England, a conflict in which the British army was precluded by the United States from any success, and to sacrifice many more lives in its prosecution would not seem to accord with English common sense.

ENDUANCE NO LONGER A VIRTUE.

A janitor in a neighboring school threw up his job the other day. When asked what was the trouble, he answered: "I'm honest and I won't stand being shammed. If I find a pencil or a handkerchief about the school when it's sweeping time, I'll find it up. Every time while the teacher or someone that is too cowardly to face me gives me a slur."

On to the Lungs.

A Cold Usually Takes the Form of Bronchitis, With Tightness in the Chest and a Painful Cough - Dr. Chase's Prescription. The way from the throat to the lungs lies along the bronchial tubes, and it is in this passage that a cold must be checked, if the lungs are to be saved from inflammation, pneumonia, and consumption.

DR. CHASE'S SYRUP OF LIMEWOOD AND TURPENTINE. Nature's own remedies for bronchial troubles are lime wood, or flaxseed, turpentine, and licorice. These specific, along with half a dozen other ingredients, equally simple and equally efficacious, make up Dr. Chase's Syrup of Lime wood and Turpentine as to make the most successful cure for throat and lung troubles that is known to-day.
