

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The author would like to thank those who have helped make Confidence Building in the Arms Control Process: The Transformation View possible. Rod Byers (sadly no longer with us) and David Leyton-Brown at York University were instrumental in helping shape the author's view of international relations and security studies. Their contribution has been a lasting one. From the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada, four people warrant individual mention. Ron Cleminson (Senior Advisor on Verification) deserves special credit for initiating the author's long relationship with the Department and sincere thanks for his unwavering support and encouragement over the years. Alan Crawford (Verification Research Program) has provided tireless support and advice during this period and deserves special thanks for his assistance. Jill Sinclair (Director of the Non-Proliferation, Arms Control, and Disarmament Division) and Gordon Vachon (Deputy Director and Head of Verification Research) also deserve thanks for their strong encouragement and support. In addition, the author has benefited greatly from the advice and insight provided by countless members of the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade Canada as well as the representatives of other countries, particularly in Vienna during the CSCE/OSCE CSBM negotiations. Their efforts are also appreciated. No acknowledgement would be complete without a special note of gratitude for family members who have made all of this possible. A particularly heart-felt "thanks," therefore, must go to them, especially the author's mother. Confidence Building in the Arms Control Process: The Transformation View is dedicated to her.
