

	PAGE
The negotiation with Brunswick	350
With the landgrave of Hesse	352
Embarkation of the troops corruptly delayed	355
Further negotiations. Debate in the house of commons	356
In the house of lords	357
Judgment on the German princes	358

CHAPTER XXIII.

AMERICA SEEKS FOREIGN AID.

1775-1776.

The presentiments of Vergennes	359
The employment of Bonvouloir as a French agent	360
Beaumarchais has an interview with Arthur Lee	361
Congress appoints a committee of foreign correspondence	362
Employment of Dumas. Bonvouloir at Philadelphia	362
Silas Deane commissioner and agent to France	363
Opinion of Vergennes on aiding America	364
Turgot's reply	366
France desires representative government	369
Retirement of Malesherbes	369
Of Turgot. Sartine favors war with England. Grimaldi	370
France and Spain send aid to America. Unhappy condition of France	371
Prediction of a revolution by Leibnitz. By Wesley	372
The age of skepticism	373

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE BRITISH RECOVER CANADA. NORTH CAROLINA DECLARES FOR INDEPENDENCE.

January-July 1776.

The British plan for the recovery of Canada	374
The Americans in Canada reinforced	375
Measures of congress for the reduction of Quebec	376
A commission from congress reaches Canada	377
The Americans decide on a retreat	378
The American commissioners advise to retire from Canada	379
Zeal of congress. The mishaps of Sullivan	380
The retreat to Crown Point	381
Attempt at the reduction of the southern colonies	382
Seven British regiments ordered to the Carolinas	383
Charles Lee at New York	384
He is invested with the southern command	385
A Highland regiment formed in North Carolina	386
Their march toward Wilmington	387
Their courage and fidelity to the king	388
Defeat of the Highlanders by the Americans	389