

THE FUNDAMENTAL MORAL PRINCIPLES IN TERMS OF WHICH MAY BE DEFINED THE VIRTUES AND VICES (OR THE SCRIPTURAL DEVELOPMENTS USED AS A DIRECT METHOD OF TEACHING THE FUNDAMENTAL ETHICAL PRINCIPLES)

| THE FUNDAMENTAL MORAL PRINCIPLESIN TERMS OF WHICH MAY BE DEFINEDTHE VIRTUES AND VICES (OR THESCRIPTURAL DEVELOPMENTS USED AS A DIRECT METHOD OFTEACHING THE FUNDAMENTAL ETHICAL PRINCIPLES) |                                                                                              |                                                                                        |                                                                                     |                                                                                                                               |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| I. Thou shalt lovethy neighbour asthyself.                                                                                                                                                          | 5. A newcommandment Igive unto you,that ye love oneanother.                  | 5. Thou shalt lovethy neighbour asthyself.                                     | 5. Love yourenemies.                                                            | 5. Bless them thatcurse you.                                                                                              |
| II. Thou shalt notmurder.                                                                                                                                                                               | 6. Whoso hateth hisbrother is amurderer.                                             | 6. Agree with thineadversaryquickly whilstthou art in theway with him. | 6. First bereconciled to thybrother and thencome and offerthy gift. | 6. Judge nottill thou artwithin thehouse.                                                                         |
| III. Thou shalt notsteal.                                                                                                                                                                               | 7. To the pure allthings are pure.                                                       | 7. Let no corruptcommunicationsproceed out ofyour mouth.                   | 7. Have nofellowship withthe unfruitfulworks ofdarkness.            | 7. Uncleanthoughtsshall not bein your mind.                                                                       |
| IV. Thou shalt notcovet.                                                                                                                                                                                | 8. Where yourtreasure is therewill your heartbe also.                            | 8. Ye cannot serveGod andmammon.                                               | 8. Let no man gobeyond anddefraud hismaster in anymatter.           | 8. Provide honestlabour.                                                                                                  |
| V. Thou shalt notbear false witness.                                                                                                                                                                    | 9. If a man say Ilove God andhateth hisbrother, he is aliar.                 | 9. Speak every manthe truth with hisneighbour.                                 | 9. Speak not evil oneof another.                                                | 9. Judge righteouslyaccording totruth.                                                                                |
| VI. Thou shalt notdesire.                                                                                                                                                                               | 10. What shall itprofit a man ifhe gain thewhole world andlose his own soul. | 10. What shall a mangive in exchangefor his soul.                              | 10. Godliness withcontentment isgreat gain.                                 | 10. Mortifyinordinanceaffectingconcupiscenceandcovetousnesswhich isthe idolatryof this world. |