

xiv THE LIFE OF WILLIAM COBBETT

CHAPTER IX

BOTLEY

Cobbett's dislike for London life—His desire for a country home—John Wright—Cobbett finds a home at Botley—His house and grounds—His plans for the future—His love of gardening and farming—Purchases more farms—Personal description of Cobbett—Cobbett in private life—His hospitality—His kindness to his dependents—He encourages rural sports—He quarrels with "the Botley parson"—His attitude towards the system of tithes—His theory of the education of children, expressed in a letter to Everard Tunno—Happiness first to be secured, and then health—His children's gardens—Teaching by example and reward and trust—Book-learning—The essential studies—Moral precepts	PAGE 240-266
---	-----------------

CHAPTER X

COBBETT'S CORRESPONDENCE (1805)	267-295
---	---------

CHAPTER XI

COBBETT'S CORRESPONDENCE (1806)	296-330
---	---------