RECIPROCITY STRIKES AT ROOT OF OUR NATIONAL LIFE

Investigations and attacks upon these corporations. In vain. Their wealth is so great, their organization so perfect, their resources so long and so effectively entrenched that the efforts seem to be of none effect. "It has been shown that storage warehouses have grown with the produce of the farm, and tons have been kept there for years, and while the farmer on the one hand was being squeezed down to low prices the produce was being doled out too slowly to the consumer in order to enhance the selling price. Every advantage is thus taken to milk and squeeze the producer on the one hand and the consumer on the other, and it is to achieve the liberty of the people of Ontario and Quebec, the producers of farm products and consumers of farm produce, that this treaty is negotiated for the purpose of turning them over to the tender mercies of the beef trust and all the other trustful trade combinations of the United States.

"I would like to ask the ministers, journals, members of parliament and others who take in this strain, if they expect to seriously discuss the proposition that throwing the farmers' markets in Canada open to the trusts of the United States is giving liberty and equality to both the producer and the consumer in Canada. I do not regard it as a serious proposition or a serious argument.

Position of the Manufacturer. "There are a few considerations which I address to the manufacturers and the manufacturers' operatives who are called upon to decide what their attitude will be in the present context. It will be admitted at once that the position of the manufacturer in Ontario and Quebec at the present time is an eminently satisfactory one. Business is extending, profits are on the whole good, the prospects for growth of business are undoubted, and everything which makes for a satisfactory condition in business seems to be present. Moreover, the prospective growth and development of Canada furnishes the prospect of an extension in all lines of manufacturing, further opening up for the energies of our business men in every department.

"The manufacturer is practically in the same position as the farmer of Ontario today. It is good business, good prices and certain prospects of an extension of his operations. And the prosperity which extends to the employer in each case is reflected in the condition of the employee. What are you to think of the arrangements that are made by the treaty of reciprocity now under discussion? The prime minister has sent word to the manufacturers that he is not hurting them and that he will not hurt them in the future. The prime minister has made statements before. At the last session of parliament he stated that no change would be made in the tariff without investigation. He has not been able to fulfill that promise.

What is Pledge Worth? "Political circumstances and exigencies have been too strong for him and have forced him to break what was regarded as a pledge upon a matter of great public importance. It is not too much to say that circumstances may be too strong for him again, and that the manufacturers would do well to depend on the inherent merits of their case rather than upon promises which may be made in good faith, but which political exigencies may require to be broken. "But the prime minister's statement is to the effect that he does not provide for the protection of the farmer is buried, and when the principles of national development are buried, and when the hope for the development of imperial consolidation in the empire is buried, you can get ready to see the duties on your manufactures buried also. There is only a short half-way stop between reciprocity in farm products and commercial union.

No Stopping Then. "You can rely upon this when the protection of the farmer is buried, and when the principles of national development are buried, and when the hope for the development of imperial consolidation in the empire is buried, you can get ready to see the duties on your manufactures buried also. There is only a short half-way stop between reciprocity in farm products and commercial union. "There are objections to the treaty which are perhaps of even greater force from a national standpoint than what has already been dealt with, and that one more object of the treaty was to conserve the natural resources of the United States. That principle has been abandoned in the treaty. It is designed to encourage the shipping of raw products, such as cream, hogs, wheat, barley and hay, so that the Canada lose the profit of converting them into the finished article and at the same time lose the advantage which comes in the fertilization of the soil from the by-products of industry.

A Blessing in Disguise. "The campaign of education which has been carried on for the past few years in Ontario is now bearing fruit. Mr. James, deputy minister of agriculture, the best authority on the subject in the Province of Ontario, declares the McKinley Bill to have been a blessing in disguise. The proposition which is now made is to go back to the farming of twenty years ago, to return to the operations of shipping crude produce, and letting our competitors have the advantage of manufacturing it. And if this is carried into effect it will put the Province of Ontario and portions of the Province of Quebec back, agriculturally speaking, for twenty years.

Free Trade in Manufactures. "But I do not propose to push my argument so far as that or to put it upon that basis. I am content to point out that the United States has offered free trade in manufactures and will undoubtedly continue to offer it from time to time. Of that I presume there can be no doubt in the mind of any present. When this treaty has been in force three or four years, when the farmer of Ontario and Quebec finds that in every one of his local markets he is confronted with farm produce from Argentina, from Australia, from New Zealand, from all sections of the United States, when his prices are borne down and in some cases his produce made unsaleable by this competition, how long do you suppose these farmers of Ontario and Quebec will submit to pay duty upon the manufactured articles which they require? "The western farmer began this talk or twenty American railways controlled the prairie provinces, when trade and the cattle trade are transferred from Chicago, when the people of the west do not purchase for themselves the dairy products that are now being purchased from Eastern Canada, when these people are buying their products from Wisconsin and the Western States, and the western farmers are buying their horses from the middle and southern States, then, how long do you suppose these farmers will submit to pay duty upon the manufactured articles which they require?

The Dilemma. "I venture to say that in five years from the time when this treaty goes into effect, there will not be one farmer in a thousand in the prairie provinces who will not demand that his representative in parliament insist, regardless of party or party policy upon the abolition of the duties on manufactured articles. When that time comes, who is going to stand between the manufacturer and the destruction of his protection? The Liberal party? In my judgment, not for a minute. The Conservative party? The Conservative party has taken its life in its hands in this present election for the purpose of fighting this very question, and you and the majority of the people of Canada decided that it is wrong and finally and decisively condemn its action. If I know anything about political parties, you can look for no more fighting upon this question from the Conservative party. "Do not make any mistake. You cannot have in a predominantly agricultural country, free trade for agricultural products and a protected close market for manufactures. You cannot get out and support this treaty reconstructed in Canadian shipyards; we have expended an immense sum of money in harbors and in the deepening of the St. Lawrence, all for the one purpose of carrying the traffic of Canada from east to west and whom west to east, to serve the trade between people of the different provinces—that interprovincial trade which binds them together and in so far as circumstances allow, carries that surplus by our own channels to the east, and from thence to the markets of the world.

What shall I bring you? "I will read you the exact words of 'What shall I bring you?' "It is of the highest importance, not only to the consumer, but to the manufacturer of paper, in order that they may secure their raw material at a reasonable price, to secure the letting down of the bars in Canada for the exportation of pulpwood. The provinces of Canada have control over the crown lands in which nine-tenths of the pulpwood is grown, and they have imposed a duty upon the export duties of various kinds upon the pulpwood in the crown land in order to prevent the export of the wood except in the form of paper. In order to induce the Canadian provinces, over whom the Dominion can exercise no control, to lift their restrictions upon the exportation of pulpwood, it is provided in the agreement that when paper is made in Canada from wood grown on land not under export restrictions, the paper may be exported into the United States free, and it is hoped that the difference of 3.75 between the duty on paper from restricted wood, and no duty on paper made from unrestricted wood, will induce the provinces to lift their restrictions.

Mrs. Stanley Brant, Deseronto, Ont., writes:—"My little boy, Stanley, 14 years old took the Summer Complaint and got so bad as to pass blood.
