Robert McCallum, city architect, who nicipal Building Commis Inspectors, which held its first annual onvention at Washington. P.C. in February last, when Mr. McCailum was cted a vice-president. He attended at the formation of the society and secured many valuable ideas, which he proposes to incorporate in the new ordinance, both from papers read by other members and from visits 10 public buildings in other cities, notably in Baltimore, where he viewed the results of the great fire.

The object of the society is to secure more uniform building laws in all cities and to collect from every source information relating to building matters, tests, etc., and the dissemination of such information among its members.

The question for Theatres.

The question of protection for theatres was naturally one of the chief topics of discussion. It was shown that many cities had adopted ordinances providing that stage scenery should be treated in different ways for protection against fire and the fact was recognized that traveling companies would be put to great inconvenience in endeavoring to conform to vanies would be put to great incon-renience in endeavoring to conform to he varied requirements. It was de-ided that a standard scheme of pro-ection should be set and an effort hade to have it adopted by all cities, to that companies would not be put to

from the destruction of lives and property. Steps have been taken to collect the ordinances relating to buildings from all the cities of Europe and America, and from these will be selected the best ideas which will be incorporated into a standard ordinance to be recommended to all municipalities. The smaller towns will not be neglected, but a simpler code will be drawn up so that the chief executive officer, where no building department exists, may be guided thereby and buildings of a higher character erected. Poor construction is more often the result of ignorance than of intentional wrongdoing.

A striking feature of the discussions was the tendency to discourage hampering legislation concerning building. The idea was rather to encourage saner notions in construction which would result in better buildings without any great increase in cost.
