Tom Moore's Sentiments.

Many local labor men declared today that they thought Tom Moore's idea of strike against high prices was a splenwas turned into a defeat by the increasing of the prices twice as much proportionately as wages were increas-ed. Still Tom Moore, president of the Dominion Labor Congress, has the conidence of all the loyal labor unionists ion, and most of those interviewed expressed the opinion that his suggestion was a capital thing.

There was one little difficulty pointed out. Striking against high prices may be all right in the matter of phono-

But in the matter of high food prices, it is not so easy. Not all the London labor men are Sinn Feiners, and they have no natural hankering after a hunger sirile.

have no natural hankering after a hunger strike.

Up around the Cigarmakers' Union headquarters the idea didn't take any too well. About 150 cigarmakers have been laid off work for an indefinite period on the ground that people are refusing to pay the high prices for cigars necessitated by the recent increase in wages, and there is depression in the business as a result. Fortunately in this instance, there is plenty I work for cigarmakers in Hamilton and Detroit, and the men with families who have been laid off are moving permanently to these cities. Unmarried men are relying on their out-of-work benefits until they can find other work to do. "A strike against high prices will be

BIRD NOTES (Contributed by McIlwraith Or. nithological Club.)

The little spotted sandpiper, or "tipup," has come back to its summer haunts on the sandy flats of the Thames. The broad-winged hawk, on its way to its northern summer home, is visiting for a few days in this locality. The most interesting record of the three, however, is that of the Bonaparte gull, which is so rare in Middlesex that it has not been recorded for many years. It was seen resting on a pond near the city. Its black head and white body were plainly visible in the bright light of the morning sun. When the observer came too near the bird flew up and away to the north, uttering its characteristic notes, but it left behind a memory that shall live long in the mind of the bird-loyer.

the Socialist Labor party aimed to give representation to human individuals as workers only.

Revolution in industry had made the American Federation of Labor obsolete, declared Mr. Smith. The Workers' International Industrial Union would unite the workers of ine industry into one unit. Representatives of departments of industry, embracing all the workers in these industries, would constitute the parliaments of the future. Production and industry would be organized on a scientific basis. Dual organization, along both conomic and political lines, was a means to an end. and that was why the Socialist Labor party and the Workers' International Industrial Union worked together.

Fred Haselgrove, referring to his advocacy of socialist doctrines for 22 years, said he had always felt that some day he would live under the socialist regime, and this day never seemed so near as at the present time. The Workers' Industrial Union, it was explained by Mr. Smith, did not believe in a general strike, but worked forward to the day when it could declare a general strike of the capitalist class.
