DROP OF 95 PER CENT. IN "DRUNK" ARRESTS UNDER PROHIBITION

(Boston Globe.)
A decline of 95 per cent in the number of arrests for drunkenness the last month under prohibition is shown in a report issued by the Massachusetts Commission on Prohibition. For July, 1918, there were 7218 arrests, as against 2319 last month. The latter figure is high, according to the report, because of the large number of "last day" arrests. The report follows:—

The total number of arrests for drunkenness in the entire state in the month of July, 1919, was 2319. The number in the corresponding month in 1918 was 7218. During the war period the number of arrests had shown a marked decline, the number in the state for the year ending Sept. 30, 1918, being 27,468 smaller than the year previous.

Returning to comparison by months, the number of arrests during July, 1917, was 11,444. This may be taken as the normal number under license. Comparing with this the number in July, 1919, the decrease is 80 per cent. But the small number for the first month under prohibition would be much smaller but for the fact that it includes the arrests on the first day of July, resulting from the drinking on the last day of the old order, making the day phenomenal in the number of arrests;

Boston alone having 533 on that day. That day aside, the arrests for the month in the entire state would fall below 1,000 and would probably show a decline of nearly or quite 95 per cent as compared with 1917.
The foregoing figures are for drunkenness arrests only. There has been an increase in the arrests for other offenses, which is explained by the probation officers in their reports to the commission as due to a stricter enforcement of laws and local ordinances by the police and by an extraordinary number of arrests for violation of the highway traffic laws. Arrests for all offenses, which are reported daily to the commission, from twenty-one courts in Boston and adjoining jurisdictions, show that in Greater Boston the total for all offenses was 4405 in July, 1919, as compared with 6408 in the same month of 1918 and 9151 in July, 1917.

The greater reduction in the number of arrests for drunkenness does not denote a corresponding relief of the trial courts. Under the operation of the release law, probation officers released in 1918 without arraignment 63 per cent of the persons arrested for drunkenness and in Boston the releases amounted to 75 per cent.

The release law is still in effect, but reports from the courts of the state show a disposition to deal more strictly with the inebriate, in some instances leading to a practical suspension of the release process and the bringing of the offender to the attention of the court.

Only Fatal.
Lady—What did your grass (rather do) of?
Kid—I can't remember exactly, but it was nothing serious.
