Monckton know what she should come to, as, on a Friday afternoon—Friday is an unlucky day—she sat at her win- go down and get her in." dow, working on a crochet scrap bag, and watching the movements of her opposite neighbor, or rather of her opposite neighbor's youngest daughter, Miss Letitia Quirk.

Miss Letitis, eighteen years old, hlack-eyed, black-haired, rosy-checked, a forward looking girl," Miss Martha Monckton pronounced her, sat at an upper window, habited in pale pink muslin, with pink shell pin and earrings, and a pale-blue bow in her hair. Below, in his garden, her excellent papa pottered about, with a large Panama hat on his bald head, expending all his energy of mind and body on two dozen tomatoes, a pair of pumpkins and other products of his amateur farming operations. In the dining-room window sat the young lady's mamma, counting naprins and cultivating a large wrinkle between the eyes, because napkins number twenty-one, two and three had been sed at dinner instead of napkins twenty-four, five and six,

Behind her, in the open pantry, the jams and jellies, the potted beef and canned salmon, stood in rows. All that was eatable or drinkable, all that was made of glass, silver, china, or linen, was evidently well-ordered in that mansion. But that piece of pink and white prettiness, the daughter of the house—

Miss Monckton thought not. "I'd like to tell her ma," she said to herself, as she rubbed her glasses; "but I suppose I shouldn't be thanked for

Then she looked again, and felt sure that Miss Letitia was talking in pantomime, with some use of the finger alphabet, to an unseen young man. It might since the person was un seen-have been a young woman; but Miss Monckton felt sure it was not. "She's going through signs of putting on her hat and cloak," said she to herself. "Now she's pointing down stairs and shaking her head. She means her pa and ma. How disrespectful! And I've had her in my Sundayschool class. Now she's saying something with her fingers. Now she's kissing her hand. If ever I see Letitia Quirk, again, I'll talk to her. She's flirting with some one." Ah, if Miss Monckton had but known! Quirk had gone still farther. Had that default of better; but in a moment or elderly lady's glasces been stronger, or had she understood the finger alphabet heart, no pistol put to her head, she that moment Letitia was arranging an elopement for that evening. On the roof of his parents' residence, hidden Horrors of horrors! what was he doing behind a chimney, Humphrey Horton, only son of Dr. Giles Horton, the principal physician of Strawberrytown, was, at that instant, saying with his thumbs and fingers :

"I will be at the cross roads with a waggon at two o'clock to'night." It was certainly time that Letitia's parents left their cabbages and jam. pots to themselves for a while, and took a little heed of their daughter.

However, as we said, Miss Monckton did not guess the worst. She crotcheted her scrap-bag until it was time to put in a crimson row, and then laid it in her basket and went out into her garden to gather a saucer full of strawberries.

The table was already spread. Minty, the old black woman who "did Miss Monckton's housework," had baked four tea biscuits and four small cup cakes ; the little china teapot held three cups of tea. It was all very pretty; no poverty, no pinching. The whole room was bright with fancy work and flower paintings, but it was lonely. "I wish," said Miss Monekton, mildly, as she looked down into her tea cup, "I wish that somebody had happened to stop in."

I am not sure that seeing Miss Monekton every day, watching her solitary spinster state, and half laughing at her, half pitying her for her tiny housekeeping arrangements, had not helped Letitia to the conclusion that yourself?" she would marry, with permission or otherwise; and since Dr. Horton and old Mr. Quirk had quarrelled, would do without the parental blessing .-Everybody knew that Miss Monckton might have had the Squire twentyeight years before, if her mother had not hated him for no reason whatever.

Letitia at this moment was packing a small portmanteau and crying into itfor she was not naturally a bad sort of girl- and it would be a very bad sort of girl, indeed, who could leave her par ents' home in that way without a tear. That solitary supper of Miss Martha Monckton was soon dispatched, and she the twilight.

The Quirk dinner-bell did not ring for half an hour; and as she saw the lights in the window the spinster don't coax that girl to do wrong. I'll 55 thought how nice it was to have a family speak to Mrs. Quirk. I'll get her to about one. Pussy was all she had to agree to your marriage. There's nolove her; and where was Pussy? thing against you as I know of. Now, "Here, Puss, Puss, Puss," ahe called; be sensible, and you shall have her yet, but Pussy did not, as usual, spring into her lap with a purr and rub her head against lady's chin. "I hope nothing has happened to Pussy," said Miss Monckton, in a appointed lover shrewdly suspected the fright; and rising, went around the truth-namely, that Letitia had been house to the kitchen end to ask Minty caught by her indiguant father in the whether Pussy was there. But Minty very act of leaving the house. had not seen the cat, nor heard the little bell it wore tied by a pink ribbon riage with Pussy in her arms, praying about its gray neck, and for two hours that Minty might not awake and see at least Miss Monckton searched house her, and feeling as terrified as though and grounds, and even the gardens of the elopement had actually been her her next-door neighbors, for the lost own. But she called on Mrs. Quirk pet. People were interested. After it next day, and the interview ended was dark they came out with candles happily for the lovers-either because or lanterns and looked in all sorts of of the tale of her own life that she told,

Miss Monckton decided that her trea- "I've nobody to leave my property sure was either stolen or dead, and to," she said to Mrs. Quirk, "and if went home to cry about it. Now, the facts of the case were these. Pussy was not the martyr her mistres, believed her. On the contrary, she was a culprit who had been fifty pun-

True to her nature she was fond of fish, and seeing some set to warm on the stone hearth in Mrs. McMahon's kitchen, had helped herself. Mrs. Mc-Mahon, detecting her in the act, and furious at the loss of her supper, had flogged her well and shut her up in a wash-boiler, from which she had just liberated her.

The unwonted usage had suggested to Pussy that the world had turned against her, and consequently when her mistress, hastily attired in slippers and wrapper, appeared at the door, she refused to obey her voice, and instead of "coming," as she was requested, ran away:

"I've no doubt those bad boys have been tying a kettle to her tail, or something," said Miss Monckton. "I must catch her." And catching up a large water-proof from the hall rack, she threw it over her head, and ran down the village street. A cat chase is, as you will acknow-edge, a very exciting sort of thing. Puss led Miss Monokton a long one Just when she thought she had her the creature doubled and fied. When she actually caught her, she slipped through her fingers. At last, coming to that corner which was called by the Strawberryites "the cross-roads," be hold a carriage, apparently empty, and the door open, and into this open door rushes Pussy, flying from her best friend with the wilfulness and inconsistency of her kind. But Miss Monckton was faithful.-She saw the opportunity of capturing her poor demented favorite, and, rushing to the carriage, thrust in her arms. Instantly they were caught by a man's strong hands, she was dragged in, the door shut, and, before she could utter a cry, the carriage was driven away at a

As I said, it was a sky of curds and whey, and this was a dark moment for the world. Miss Monckton could not see who held her, but she had no doubt that the purpose of the individual was murder. She tried to pray, but could on is bad enough, but Letitia only thing of the first questions in the regained a little composure. As yet she could not speak, but she tried to

And now she found her voice. "Open the carriage door," she cried 'let me out this instant! I don't know who you are ; but you never could make me happy-never. Let me out!" "Good Lord deliver us!" ejaculated the still unseen gentleman. "Who is

At this instant the moon rushed out from under a cloud and lay in perfect silver glory in a sea of blue. Miss Monckton saw her captor's face.

"It's Humphrey Horton !" she cried. "I believe it is Miss Monckton!" said Humphrey.
"What did you drag me into this carriage for ?" asked the lady.

"Why did you get in?" asked the young gentleman "I was trying to catch Pussy," said Miss Monckton; and suddenly she felt the truth borne in upon her.

"You wicked young man!" she exclaimed. "You were here to elope with Letitia Quirk. I saw her signals to-day, but I did not understand them until now. Are you not ashamed of

"Miss Monckton, when two people love each other, they want to get married," said poor Humphrey, who was only twenty-one. It was a simple plea, but it touched the poor spinster's heart, full as it was of memories of her own past, set topsyturvy by other people's ill temper. "Well, I don't know but what they do, Humphrey," she said, with rural caution of expression. "But they ought to marry properly, not like this. Carrying a girl off in the middle of the night isn't the way." " Not if you were not bothered and badgered and tormented," sighed Humtook her knitting out upon the porch in phrey. "Poor Letitia! I wonder where she is! We must go back." "Of course," said Miss Monckton. "And you must go away. Humphrey
