

IS IT BY FAITH, OR BY SANCTIFICATION?

Since these, so widely different, are taken from Rom. 8: 1-4, I think it will be a good work in the interest of truth, to transcribe what Rev. Robert Frost, D. D., has written. His interpretation is, to my mind, precisely the teaching of the passage.

The first verse of this chapter seems to be an inference from the whole preceding discussion. The apostle having established the doctrine of justification and answered the objections commonly urged against it, now asserts his triumphant conclusion. There is, therefore, etc.; that is to say it follows from all that has been said concerning the believer's justification by the righteousness of Christ and his complete deliverance from the law as a covenant, that to him there can be no condemnation. The design of Paul is not so much to assert the different offices of the law and the gospel, as simply to bring to the attention of a certain class, viz, those who are in Christ. To them there is no condemnation whatever; not only no final condemnation, but no condemnation now, from the moment of their union to Christ and deliverance from the curse of the law. The reason is this: that Christ hath endured the penalty and obeyed the precept of the law in their stead.

"The law of sin and death may be explained of the moral law, which brought good in itself, notwithstanding the fact that the occasion both of sin and death. On the other hand, the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus may be explained of the life-giving spirit of Christ. He who is not consistent with the experience of the people of God, and assign as a reason of the assertion in the first verse that he is not a reason, since the sanctification of believers cannot be regarded as the ground of their deliverance from condemnation. The apostle must not be made to say "There is no condemnation," etc., for we are sanctified or freed from the law of corruption; but there is no condemnation for the gospel but because we are freed from the condemning power of the law. This view likewise accords best with the continuation of the subject in the third verse, which assigns the reason of the assertion in verse second.

"By the sacrifice of Christ, God indeed absolved his abhorrence of sin, and secured its final overthrow. It is not, however, of the sanctifying influence of this sacrifice that the apostle speaks here to speak, but of its justifying power. The sense, therefore, is that God passed a judicial sentence on sin, in the person of Christ, on account of which, that has been effected which the law could not effect (justification) namely, sin being condemned in the human nature of Christ, cannot be condemned and punished in the persons of those represented by him. They must be justified."

"This view gives consistency to the whole passage, from the first verse to fourth inclusive. The apostle clearly begins with the subject of justification, when, in the first verse, he affirms that to those who are in Christ, there is no condemnation. If the question be put—why is this? the second verse gives an answer that believers are delivered from the law as a covenant of works. If the question again be put—whereas this deliverance? the third verse points to the sacrifice of Christ, which, the fourth verse assures us, was offered with the very design that the righteousness of the law should be fulfilled in us." This clause, according to the principle of interpretation laid down above, does not relate to the believer's obedience to the righteous requirements of the law. The apostle has in view a more immediate design of the sacrifice of Christ. The right or demand of the law (works) was satisfaction to the injured honor. Its penalty must be borne as well as its precept obeyed. The sacrifice of Christ answered every claim, and as believers are one with him, the righteousness of the law has been "fulfilled in them."

"The whole passage is thus consistently explained of justification." Those who have any difficulty in taking the law of sin and death, in this passage, for the moral law as explained above, have just to remember the true teaching, that the law was added because of sin—because of the transgressions; that "without the law, sin is dead;" and that "the law is the knowledge of sin;" and that "sin is the transgression of the law." In regard to its being the law of death, its ministrations is expressly called in the Word of God, "the ministration of death." We can easily see then, how "there is no condemnation" to one who is set free from the law, for this is the law that condemns—the law whose ministrations is expressly called the ministration of condemnation.

"The law of sin, in the christian's members" does not condemn. No one ventures to say, that Paul was not freed from condemnation, though he decried the warning of this law; and when he closes his remarks on this law confessing that he himself with the flesh, serves the law of sin, it is not the most marvelous interpretation that makes him say with the same breath, or write with the next dash of his pen, that he is set free from this law. But, lo! less marvelous is the interpretation that makes him say in the face of all his teaching of justification by faith, that there is no condemnation to one, because he is set free from this law of sin in his members. In order to be thoroughly stripped from the last vestment of this delusion, that justification, or freedom from condemnation, is by sanctification we have only to remember that "God justifies the ungodly" who believe on him; and that from that moment their faith is reckoned for righteousness." and "The Problem is not solved." If, then, we have to go and learn what this means, "Verily, verily I say to you, he that hears my word, and believes him, who sent me has everlasting life, and comes not into condemnation, but has passed out of death into life.

Let us rejoice that the glorious doctrine of sanctification—progressive justification—is so clearly taught, in so many passages of God's Word, and so many passages of the Word, and so many passages of the Word, where it is not to be found in passages where it is not to be found. His habit was consistent with his purpose to be an ungodly christian.

INTERRUPTED STUDIES.

CHAS. REGGOLD C. S. WALLACE

James Belcher Taylor was accused to break away from his studies, when he found his thoughts too completely engrossed by them, to spend a season in meditation or in the wrestling of important prayer. This was not because he undervalued his books, but because he valued his fellowship with God. His habit was consistent with his purpose to be an ungodly christian.

Common Christians, who at the same time are good scholars, are needed imperative to day. Emphasis, therefore, may be laid on the necessity of interrupting study at proper times, and with sufficient frequency, that the spiritual nature may be refreshed.

A Christian college or university should be expected to make provision for such hours and days of retirement from the heat and weariness of study as may be needed for the highest development of its students.

Chauncy M. Depew said not long ago that undue brain work was liable to lead to quick, ready, and sudden death. Many of the over-worked among students, teachers and preachers can testify that they have lost something of their old-time manhood in that they are nervous, and sometime quick to take offense at peevish. Some, if they could see themselves as others see them, would be able to add that they have not the quickness of decision and the sureness of judgment which they had once enjoyed.

Because of the dangers resulting from undue attention to books, college gymnastics and athletics are encouraged. Once a day, at least, they interrupt their studies and go out to play. Once in the twenty-four hours they interrupt their studies to sleep. Nor does any one suggest that sleep and exercise, though they take precious hours, are an interference with the legitimate work of the student.

If bodily exercise profiteth a little, what of spiritual exercise? And if it is wise to set apart generous portions of time for the recreation of the body, why should this not be done for the recreation of the soul? Beyond what is commonly done something might be done, the effect of which, while not against the interests of sound scholarship, would help produce a ripeness of mind and body, than that which is now coming from our institutions of higher learning.

Not many months ago a representative of a Canadian university stated in a letter to the author that he was unable to attend at lectures one day in each month that all might have an opportunity to engage in a consideration of the work of foreign missions, and in exercises designed to deepen the spiritual life of the students and professors. He was writing to the representative of a university, where that thing which he declared impossible was done habitually, and with the most satisfactory results.

The student, whether a Christian or not, who can wisely ignore that great world movement which goes under the name of foreign missions does not live to day. Greater than the Eastern quest, than the exploration of the hidden parts of the continents, than the conclusions of the philosophers, than the latest contributions to literature, than the inventions which stir the world, than the jealousies of nations, is that aggressive, dashingly endearing and brutal imperialism, ever sanguinary, masterfully unselfish propaganda which is animated by the religion of the Man of Nazareth. It is well for the universities and colleges to take practical cognizance of this movement and of its phenomena; to which the alert attention of all should be called. That every institution which is called Christian may well do this, seems hardly to be affirmed.

A monthly suspension of routine work to give place to a missionary program is both rare and salutary. The college or university in which this cannot be done to advantage, hardly deserves to be called Christian.

The interruption of studies from time to time for the deepening of the spiritual life is feasible and desirable. Does the ordinary student, even in our Christian institutions of learning, increase in spirituality? Does his fellowship with God grow more sweet? Answers to this question, if they were asked publicly, would be given tardily; but that an answer, and regretful, full of shame and self-reproach, would be given promptly within the hours of many students is certain. Engrossed by tasks, tempted by ambition, position, by pride of intellect, the young man whose studies were begun with high spiritual resolves, and aspirations has departed into a far country. And there he has lost his Father's treasures, and the whole outlook of his life has changed for the worse.

stronger than it is. Dr. Doerchester's book was published in 1881, and since that time great progress has been made; but it is quite evident that the rate of progress has not declined during the last fifteen years, the statistics of the years immediately preceding it furnishes a pretty fair basis of calculation as to what it has been during this latter period.

In order to get a correct impression of what has been done in the spread of christianity and the moral conquest of the world in modern times, it may be as well for us to go a little way back. In 1500 there were 100,000,000 christians in the world; in 1600 there were 125,000,000; in 1700 there were 155,000,000 and in 1800 there were 200,000,000. It was during the eighteenth century that the great Wesleyan revival, and the extraordinary quickening of the churches of Christendom which resulted from it, took place. This, too,—or the closing years of the eighteenth century, the modern missionary era; and not simply present, but the result of the impulse which was given to the life and activity of the church. In 1830 the number of christians had grown to 228,000,000; in 1840 to 259,000,000; in 1850 to 322,000,000; in 1876 to 374,000,000; and in 1880 to 410,000,000. Thus it will be seen that while christianity gained one hundred millions in the first one hundred years of its history, and another one hundred millions in the next hundred years, following that period, the entire result of the progress of eighteen hundred years has been more than doubled before the end of the eighth decade of this century.

And what is the rate of progress that is maintained, it is safe to say that the two closing decades of the century will add at least fifty millions to the number of christians in the world, bringing up the grand total to 460,000,000. The progress of christianity in the "earth," Dr. Doerchester observes, "we notice similar progress. The latest computations fix the total area at 52,062,470 square miles, of which christian nations have under their civil control 32,419,915 square miles; and the pagano Mohammedan, 19,642,555—three fifths christian, and two fifths pagan and Mohammedan. Dividing the christian nation of Protestant Governments, 14,371,187 square miles; and Roman Catholic, 9,304,605 and under Greek church governments, 8,778,128 square miles." The acquisition of foreign territory by Great Britain itself is a momentous fact, which has a direct bearing upon the subject of progress in christianity in the world. It is without a parallel in the history of the world. "She bears rule over one-fourth of the surface of the globe, and one-fourth of its population. Her possessions are in all parts of the world, larger than the parent state. She owns three millions and a half square miles in America; one million each in Africa and Asia, and two and a half millions in Australasia." And even these figures do not include the vast territories of the British Empire, as they take no account of the British possessions in South America, of Egypt, which, though not formally, is essentially a part of the empire, and of the immense area in southern and central Africa, where, under the same auspices, were made, some under her control.

The increase of population in the countries under Christian Governments has an important bearing on the subject. In 1850 the population of such countries amounted to 128,000,000. In 1876 it was 170,000,000; in 1880 it was 237,788,000; and in 1876 it was 287,849,411. The proportion of this increase which has been made in countries under Protestant Governments is remarkable. In 1850 the population of Roman Catholic governments was 80,000,000, and under Greek church governments about 20,000,000. In 1876 the population of countries under Roman Catholic governments was 102,000,000; under Greek church governments, 184,164,000; Greek orthodox governments, 60,000,000; Protestant governments, 158,000,000. In 1876 the population of countries under Roman Catholic governments was 180,787,905; under Greek church governments, 96,101,894; under Protestant governments, 408,569,612.

It is true, indeed, that this increase has not been all Protestant. The heathen and the Mohammedan population has increased as well as the christian population. But where the christian and the non-christian religions have existed side by side, the former have increased far more rapidly than the latter. The following illustration of this was given by Sir William Hunter, one of the very highest authorities on the subject, in an address delivered by him at the great missionary conference held in London, in 1883. "The fact is, that in the last thirty years of which we had comparative statistics, there had been an increase of ten and a half per cent. in the whole population, but the increase of the native christian population was sixty-four per cent. The fact is, the only religion in the world today that is making progress in the sense of gaining upon the world's population, is the religion of Christ. And among the churches of Christendom those which are making the most rapid strides are the Evangelical Protestant churches. The Baptists, including all the bodies bearing that name, had 1,443,565 communicants in 1860; but in 1880, the number had been increased to 2,938,873. The Methodist communicants increased in the same time from 2,818,414 in 1860, to 6,065,109. It is to be regretted that comparative statistics of the other Evangelical churches are not at hand, but such as to show that there is no ground for doubting that the world is growing better, and that christianity is rapidly gaining upon the world's population, and that nothing but fidelity on the part of christian people is necessary in order to secure its speedy and complete triumph."

IS THE WORLD GROWING BETTER?
THE CHRISTIAN GUARDIAN.
An esteemed correspondent asks us this question, "Is the world growing better?" or is it true that heathenism and Mohammedanism are making more rapid progress than christianity? Perhaps a few figures, illustrative of the progress of christianity in recent times, will be more satisfactory than a more elaborate answer. Dr. Daniel Doerchester is an acknowledged authority on religious statistics, and we cannot do better than to quote from his work entitled, "The Problem is not solved." It is to be regretted that the edition of this valuable work at hand does not bring the statistics quite down to date; if it did, the case for christianity would be much

GOD NEVER DISAPPOINTS US.
BY REV. FRED. L. CUYLER, D. D.
We cannot trust ourselves too little, and we cannot trust God too much. "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding." "The Problem is not solved." It is to be regretted that the edition of this valuable work at hand does not bring the statistics quite down to date; if it did, the case for christianity would be much child's running over the hill to catch the rainbow; when he has over the hill, the rainbow is as far off as ever. "If our expectation of spiritual growth and of conquest of temptations rests on our own resolutions and our own strength, then our day dreams are inevitably doomed to disappointment."

"My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him." God never disappoints us. When we study the book of revelation, we find our utmost expectation overtopped by the wonderful reality. When we obey God, we find the reward sooner or later, just as surely as day follows the sunrise. When we trust God; he never fails us. When we pray to him might, with faith, with submission, with perseverance, and with honest desire to glorify him, he answers our prayers. We believe that our Heavenly Father ever turned a deaf ear to an honest prayer offered in the right spirit. He is a Sovereign, and doth his own wise will; and if it pleaseth him to keep us waiting for the answer, then we must believe that that delay is not always delays.

If we had only to demand from God just what we desire, and in the way and the time that suits our pleasure, then we would be snatching at the reins of the universe. Did you ever know a child that ruled its parents without ruling itself? And if it spoils our children to have their own way, I am sure that it would be for our ruin to have God's way at all our disposal. If this be our "expectation" from God, then the sooner we abandon it the better. God keeps all his promises, but he has never promised to let you and me hold the reins. He answers our prayers in his own way and at the time that he in his infinite wisdom determines. Some prayers are not answered at once. More than one faithful mother has gone to her grave before the child for whose conversion she prayed had given his heart to God. Some prayers are answered in a way so unlooked for that the answer is not recognized; eternally will make it plain; for many petitions are answered according to the intention, and not according to the letter of the request. The blessing granted has been something different from what the believer expected. Jacob, when he blessed the sons of Joseph, laid his right hand on the son who stood at his left side. So God sometimes takes off his hand of blessing from the thing we prayed for, and lays it on another, which is more for our good and his own glory. He often surprises his people with unexpected blessings, and heaven will have abundant witness to the fact.

Let us rejoice to remember that our Saviour is God; and in him dwelleth all fulness. "Of his fulness have we all received," said the beloved disciple, and John was not disappointed. Neither was Paul, who was in the habit of saying "Blessed with might in the inner man." There is a fulness of grace and love and power and peace and comfort that his redeemed children have never been able to explore, much less to exhaust. I feel some little brooks, nearly run dry, the other day, in the mountain, but I found yonder harbor, fed from the fathomless Atlantic, as full as ever. "Oh, how shallow a soul I have to take in Christ's love," said the holy Rutherford; "I have sailed more than four hundred leagues, and brought with me, How little of the sea can a child carry in his hand; as little am I able to take away of my greatness, my boundless and running over Christ Jesus!"

"The soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him." There can be no divided responsibility; it is God or nobody. As the old Puritan writer Trapp reminds us, "They trust God, but they trust him not entirely. He that stands with one foot on a rock and another foot on a quicksand will sink as surely as he that hath both feet on a quicksand." The stake is indescribably tremendous, for it involves my eternal destiny. Even heaven is only an "expectation," but it is from him!

"My hope is built on nothing less Than Jesus' blood and righteousness; On Christ, the solid rock, I stand; All other ground is sinking sand."
—The Evangelist.

IN NOVA SCOTIA ANOTHER TRIUMPH

The Case of John S. Morgan, of Bridgewater.

PROMINENT BUSINESS MAN
His Testimony Right to the Point—Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

BRIDGEWATER, N. S., Nov. 23.—(Special).—No business man is better or more favorably known in this part of Nova Scotia than Mr. John S. Morgan, business man of this town. For eighteen years he suffered from one stage to another in the progress of kidney disease, but without help until he got hold of Dodd's Kidney Pills. He tells the story in his own words, and says:—

"I commenced with headaches about eighteen years ago, with lumbago and pain in my limbs." "I was under the doctors care several times, and took several remedies made from doctors medicine, but gradually came to be badly crippled up." "In the autumn of 1868, I began to run down in flesh and strength rapidly until I was about forty pounds under my usual weight." "I was then in constant misery from rheumatic pain and the dread of passing urine which was of a very dark color and caused me the most intense misery." "I realized my danger, but from some thing I read about Dodd's Kidney Pills I made up my mind to use them, and commenced at once." "I have used twenty boxes, have regained my weight and I am now as strong and well as ever before in my life." "When I commenced using Dodd's Kidney Pills I was entirely unable to perform my duties or enjoyments of life and they have saved and prolonged it. I trust my testimony may be the means of doing good to others."

INCONVENIENT REMOVAL.

Some men's imaginations are so restless as to be an inconvenience to them. If they rest something bad or trashy, it haunts them for weeks. Bryant Taylor often complained of the tenacity with which his memory held the most absurd things. But Bryant Taylor read everything that came his way, and thus degraded his memory to the uses of the pack-horse. Bryant also had a marvelous memory, but he never abused it. Knowing that it never forgot anything, he was indolent about his reading, and never browsed among useless or worthless books. His memory, therefore, was not a source of anything annoying, soothing and exhilarating him.

When at sea he was always too sick to read much. But such was his familiarity with the English poets, that he would beguile the time by reciting page after page from favorite poems. However long the voyage, he never exhausted the resources of his memory. "I allowed a little time," he said, in his later years, "I could recite every line of poetry I have ever written." Young people gifted with a retentive memory should imitate in their reading, the fastidiousness of Bryant; rather than voraciousness of Taylor. Now and then a young man or young woman, when tempted to read a bad book, says to himself, "Oh! I'll only look it through; it won't hurt me." But it will. And the stronger the memory the greater and more lasting will be the injury. The evil which a bad book does lives long after its title is forgotten. It raises bad thoughts and images, which will not down when we bid them.—Ex.

He began to talk very gently about different sorts of kindness, and that I differed to be kind like a christian, I must be kind without hoping for any reward, whether gratitude or anything else. He told me that the best fulfillment of Jesus in all times had tried hard to do everything, however small, for God's sake, and to put themselves away.—Juliana Horatia Ewing.
