the old-time ante-bellum house servants in consequence of the ending of planta-tion life and of slavery is as evident as it was inevitable. They had to go with the economic conditions under which they flourished. Most housekeepers, we fancy, would guarantee to train good do-mestics if assured of their permanence, and the old-time house servants had pe-culiarly few opportunities for seeking new masters and mistresses of their own voli-tion. In their place has grown up a gen-eration of servants who have had no in-its face this should not be the case. There is apparently an bundance of very cheap colored labor in the South, and the splendid qualities of the "mammy" and the old-time negro cook and butler have been set forth by every one of the numerous writers who have been flood-ing the book market with stories or novels of the "Old South," until their traits and characteristics have become al-most proverbial. Yet, as a matter of fact, it is growing more and more diffi-cult throughout the South to get faithful servants who have any knowledge of their duties. most people imagine." Of deep economic importance as this readjustment of the Negro in industria and domestic life, is it is a great pity that it is complicated by the question o color.
