Styleman Herring, from the Holborn Union, and also the Roman Catholic pauper children sent out by Archbishop Manning. |

See her history on page 6, No. 65, in Synopsis.                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Page 5.—“Miss Rye receives considerable assistance from the Governments of the Dominion and the Province of Ontario.” We are again informed of this fact on pages 6 and 33. | The considerable assistance, amounts in five years to 402 l. from the two Governments referred to, and 300 l. from the Government of New Brunswick, half of which, not being needed for work undertaken, was refunded. See Mr. Doré's Letter, p. A.                       |

| Page 6.—“Although in 1868-69 the guardians of two or three Unions availed themselves of Miss Rye's,” &c., “to send pauper children,” &c.                             | The first Union that sent any children to Canada was Kirkdale, in Liverpool, and they sent 50 children in October 1869.                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Page 6.—“Children from Reformatories sent.”                                                                                                                                        | I have only taken three such children, and these were from Feltham in 1869.                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Page 7.—“Case of parents living, their consent is said to be obtained.”                                                                                                     | Is always so obtained. Has Mr. Doyle never heard of writs of Habeas Corpus?                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Page 8.—“St. George's Home, in Côté St. Antoine.”                                                                                                                                  | Côté St. Antoine is three or four miles distant from St. George's Home.                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Page 8.—“The children Miss Rye has distributed in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, consigned to the care of persons in whom she reposes confidence.”                                 | Each time I have placed children in either New Brunswick or Nova Scotia I have accompanied them there myself, and have never left either province until the children have been placed.                                                                                                         |
| Page 8.—“The ‘Western Home,’ bought for Miss Rye by subscription.”                                                                                                                 | The “Western Home” was bought by the moneys given me in 1868, in answer to my letters to the Times on the emigration of children, and was earned by my own pen and hard labour.                                                                                                         |
| Page 10.—“There is in this ‘Home’ (Niagara) a paid matron and a servant.”                                                                                                          | At the time of Mr. Doyle's visit to my “Home,” besides myself, there were—Miss Allaway, hon. secretary; Mrs. Sittleton, matron; Mrs. Gray, cook; Alice Heathcote, parlourmaid; Samuel Tracey, man. See also Miscellaneous Particulars, No. 10.                                                 |
| Page 11.—“The other sense in which the word ‘adoption’ is used is simply ‘apprenticeship.’”                                                                                        | These statements are altogether erroneous. We have our “adoptions,” and our “apprenticeships,” respectively figured G and H in Mr. Doyle's Report, with “I,” the apprenticeship of the lads, and no other or third method of placing out children.                                             |
