

It has been felt by people of all classes, but particularly by persons with fixed and limited incomes, and especially by the wage-earning classes. Not only has it been felt by persons of all classes, but it has been felt in all directions. It has levied its toll of rich and poor alike. The man of wealth, governed by the demands of fashion finds automobiles an essential where carriages formerly sufficed.

An ostentatious extravagance in display has displaced