whose builders show their reverence for the dead by the number of stones which they accumulate. . . . Having indulged in these complaints, let us add that even a less skilful biographer than Miss Yonge could hardly have failed, with the materials available, to produce a book of no common interest. . . . Such a life, with its grand lessons of usefulness, is a blessing and an honour to the age in which it is lived. The biography which we have here reviewed cannot be studied without pleasure and profit."—Sat. Rev., xxxvi, 818.
