he was intent and interested. At the end of thirty, when the first act terminated, he was sitting spell-bound. "Shall I leave off here?" inquired the stranger, "or shall I go on? I am ny own,

sir, will

r, upon let, as-

, by the k," con-

ling Mr.

ucing a pocket, rom first sert that ragedies

n in the stly, and

hat Mr. rted man

ort of re-

sense of tion gave gled with that the o numer-

are bitten

eir miser-

g phenom-lass there le it is to managers cked the

his lips. s of mortal

w that he er than for fable tone.

humoring

to get rid

u wish me

er? I am to it now, nanuscript

name and to glance d return it wingly and

d. "You

, but really

ir. Would here? Not nagers and a as unsuit-had read it.

I gummed d there as a script came disturbed.

culated Mr.

ain, "what confounded

the urbane

ne of heaven

while I read the stranger and regard-

e calmest of

was utterly

mpertinence

of this, sir,

There is the self up to his werful frame nificant pro

ove, sir," he have acceded outrageous.

'In my own

on the police.

se," said the ringly.

You don't know.

with a wave of his hand. Every trace ordinary play. With kindling eye and heightened color, the stranger proceeded, his deep, musical voice never missing a point nor slurring light and shade. The motive of the tragedy — to wit, the representation of the devil in a human shape-wasobviously far from original, but the treatment of the subject was absolutely so, differing both in details and essentials - and differing for the better — from every previous concep-tion. It breathed throughout an air not merely of powerful tragic interest but of genuine reality and natural consequence which hurried you for-ward to the fatal climax by a series of irresistible developments. Long be-fore the end was reached Mr. Quillet, who was far from predisposed in the stranger's favor, saw that the piece strangers lavor, saw that the piece would be a fortune to any manager and inwardly confessed that his own just completed tragedy, on which hitherto he had rather valued himself, would be literally extinguished by the blaze of so powerful a production. But the wonderful strength and terrible pathos of the denouement soon obliterated from his mind everything in the shape of sordid calculations and left him only conscious of an overwhelming sense of tragic emotion. "There !" said the stranger, laying down his papers, and regarding Mr. Quillet's expressive face with a look of placid triumph. "What do you say? Does the piece justify the strong measures I have taken to force it on your notice, or does it not? Speak, sir !" "It-it's a masterpiece," gasped Mr.

Quillet. "A work of genius-a splen-did tragedy. There is no man living, and very few dead, who could have written it." " I believe you," was the quiet reply. "It stands alone. I know it. And now I give you your reward for having heard me to the end. Take this tragedy, write your name upon it and produce it at the Erectheum for your own 'Eh-er-I don't understand you,'

Mr. Quillet ejaculated, supposing that his ears had deceived him. "My words were plain," replied the stranger. "My meaning equally so.

I make you a present of my piece-out and out-with no reserve, except that you offer it to Billhurst of the Erectheum, in lieu of the one which you are now writing.' "Impossible !" cried Mr. Quillet.

"Common honesty forbids me to appro-priate your work like that. Why, man alive, do you not realize that this tragedy is worth money to you? It means name and fortune.

laughed the other scorn-"Bah !" laughed the other scorn-lly. "What do I want with either i fully. I have long enjoyed too much of both. All I desire is to have my tragedy produced. In whose name, or to whose profit, I care not a straw."

" But, really," objected Mr. Quillet. "I"-

"Pish-my friend, none of these buts. With my eyes open and in good faith, I make you an offer which, while its suits me, is highly advantag-eous to yourself. If you are too proud gott, .J scowl. At the end of fifteen his mysterious visitor. Mr. Quillet read the tragedy through ready, you know, to stand by our comforce. It was some time before he could make up his mind what to do pact. "Go on- go on !" said Mr. Quillet, about it. But at last he submitted the play to Billhurst, manager of the Erectheum, telling him the extraordinof anger and resentment had left him. It was evident from the expression of his face and from his whole demeanor ary and peculiar circumstances under that he was alive to no other sensations than those produced by this extra-which he had become possessed of it. Billhurst read the play, and at once enthusiasm. "there's a mint of money in that piece. It's as certain a draw as anything I ever read. Only I don't like the very rummy way in which it has come to us. Supposing it should have been stolen, eh ?"

"That is hardly probable, I think," was the rejoinder, "and if you think of taking the piece in hand you might feel your way ahead a little by putting a few preparatory notices in the news-

"How would that safeguard us?"

asked the manager. "Why, in the event of the play hav. ing been cribbed or unfairly come by, the notice might catch the eye of some person interested, who would, of course, ommunicate with you." "True," said Mr. Billhurst thought fully ; "I will give the matter my con sideration.

The manager was very much worried just then about his accounts, which showed an ugly deficit. His last ven-ture had lost him £2,000 sterling. The current piece was not paying its

"But, there's money in this new "But, there's money in this new piece," said Mr. Billhurst to himself, confidently, "and, I tell you what it is, confidently, "and take all chances."

I will put it on and take all chances. Having once made up his mind, the manager did not let the grass grow under his feet. Within a fortnight the under his feet. Within a fortnight the new tragedy was in full rehearsal. It went well from the beginning. The manager was in great feather. He saw a sure and phenomenal success before him. Then an accident hap-pened which nearly turned his hair grave (on the night before the last gray. On the night before the last dress rehearsal, and only two nights before the production of the piece, Standish, the leading tragedian, was attacked and robbed in Drury Lane, being so roughly handled that the police, who found him lying stunned on the pavement, took him straight to the nearest hospital. Here he lay in a very precarious condition. The manager, who only heard the news when he came down to the theatre the next morning, was well nigh be side himself. "Quillet !" he ejaculated, with a groan, "Everything depends on that part, and Standish's understudy will never carry it through on the first night." "It is a bad business," admitted

Quillet, ruefully. "Please, sir," said one of the call-boys, thrusting his head in at the door

'here's a gent to see you." "I'm busy; I'm "-cried the manager. But the call-boy had withdrawn, and Mr. Billhurst found himself levelling these remarks at a tall, dark-complex-ioned stranger, who stood bowing and smiling in the doorway.

his friend by the sleeve.

about poor Standish." ther prise the street door banged behind ager he came forward and raised his

" Mr. Billhurst ? " "The same. What the deuce does Mr. Quillet read the tragedy through again to himself and was more than ever struck by its wonderful power and force. It was some time before he could make up his mind what to do taken a most dangerous recruit into taken a most dangerous recruit into your company, Mr. Billhurst. He is one of our worst cases." "Good heavens!" ejaculated the manager. "You don't mean to say that the man's mad?" "Hopelessly so. And very cunning and dangerous. This is the third time he has escaped in six weeks. From information which we have received we have little doubt that it was he who half murdered poor Mr. Standish." "He?" cried the manager, his eyes wide open with dismayed astonshment. "I - I - saw that he was peculiar. But it never occured to me that he was insane."

hat.

"No ; because his particular delusion happened to fall in with your theatrical requirements, and so passed, naturally enough, for a mere stage assumption. He believes that he is the devil. And " (adding the doctor, wiping his forehead and glancing toward the cab, from which the subject of his remarks was regarding him with a truly diabolical stare) "I am half disposed to think that he must be."

-London Truth. A MARTYR-MISSIONARY OF SCOTLAND.

The Countess of Courson in Ave Maria.

II. John Ogilvie was the descendant of a noble and chivalrous race. His ancestors were renowned in Scottish history for their martial spirit. In the sixteenth century Lord Ogilvie, of Drummuire, was called "Magnum virum et bellicosum." Another Ogil-vie, Sir Walter, who was killed in an opcounter, with the Highlenders encounter with the Highlanders, was, says an ancient ballad, "stout and manful-never known to turn back." The lion-like courage and strength of will for which the lairds of Drummuire were celebrated are to be found, purified by higher motives and illumined with the beauty of sanctity, in their Jesuit descendant, of whom it may be said that, like Sir Walter Ogilvie, he ' never known to turn back." was ' John Ogilvie, whose heroism was so far to eclipse that of the warlike lairds whose blood ran in his veins, was born at Drummuire, or Drum near Keith, in 1580. His father, Walter Ogilvie, was a Protestant, but many members of his family were noted "Papists." When still a mere lad John was sent to pursue his studies abroad. He visited France, Germany and Italy; and was more occupied, we are told, by thoughts of religion than by the pursuit of human knowledge. He had heard the merits and demerits of the old and the new faith vehemently discussed at home ; and his earnest mind was drawn to the ancient religion, in spite of the heretical influences that had surrounded his childhood. At length, wearied by the endless dis cussions, that seemed to produce confusion instead of bringing light or strength, he turned to prayer as the

Mr. Quillet gave a start and plucked desires our salvation and has promised rest to the weary and heavily laden. "It is the mysterious author of the His filial confidence was rewarded ; and piece," he whispered. "Good morning, Mr. Quillet," said soul, so ardent in its quest for truth, God gave not only the gift of faith, but Billhurst. This is unfortunate news to the straightforward and generous on the crowning favor of martyrdom. the manager, eyeing him with a Catholic Church to be the only true shrewd, interested glance. tion; and in the year 1596 we find him at the Scotch College of Louvain, in Belgium. The rector of the College Father Crichton, having been obliged, for financial motives, to diminish the number of his scholars, young Ogilvie proceeded to the Eenedictine College of Ratisbon. Finally, in 1598, at the age of eighteen, he was received into the Society of Jesus by Father de Alberi, Provincial for Austria. He made his novitiate at Brunn in Moravia, his philosophical studies at Gratz : then, after teaching literature at Vienna for three years, he was sent to Olmutz, where he studied theology, and at the same ime directed the Confraternity of Our Lady. For many years after his departure from Olmutz, the remembrance of the young Scotchman re-mained alive in the hearts of the children whom he had trained to piety. His was a character well fitted to leave its mark upon all those with whom he was brought into contact. He was a model religious-obedient, devout, kind to others, ever ready to help them at the sacrifice of his own pleasure. His natural gifts were of a high order ; his intellect singularly quick They called the performers-and particularly the new and clear, well fitted for controversy and discussion ; his speech ready and fluent; his temper very sweet and bright. To the solid virtues of a religious he thus united the qualities that make men popular and influential. One very characteristic trait in his strongly marked individuality was his keen sense of humor. We shall see how in the midst of excruciating suflieved that he had hit upon a theatri-cal Eldorado. When he quitted the theatre that night he felt most amiferings his quaint and irrepressible cheerfulness breaks out again and again.

Father John Ogilvie. The latter ardently desired to be sent to Scotland ; he had been ordained priest in Paris in 613, and his one desire was to win the

With the two Jesuits was a Scotch Capuchin, Father John Campbell. The three were closely disguised, and had, as was the custom of the missionaries of those days, adopted false names. Father Moffet took the name of Halyburton, Father Campbell that of Sinclair ; and Father Ogilvie, per-haps in remembrance of his father, Walter Ogilvie, assumed the name of Watson-son of Wat, or Walter. The three travellers reached Scotland safe, in spite of the Government spies that were stationed in all the sea-On landing, they immediately ports. separated. Father Campbell went to Edinburgh, Father Moffet to the lowlands; and our hero proceeded north of Edinburgh, and began by visiting a brother, who lived at St. Andrew's, and whose conversion he had very much at heart. Father Gordon seems to have regarded this proceeding with some misgiving. A long experience had taught him to distrust even the strength of family ties when religious differences existed. But John Ogilvie was not one to count the cost if he thought that his own danger might be the means of serving others. He did not succeed, however, in converting his brother; and after a stay of some weeks in the north he returned to Edinburgh. The secrecy which the Catholics of hose troublous times were obliged to practise in order to escape the notice of their enemies makes it all but impossible to follow the missionaries in heir different journeys and changes of abode. We know, at least, that Father Ogilvie spent the winter of 1613-1614 in Edinburgh, under the spitable roof of a Catholic lawyer, William Sinclair, whose testimony as o his guest's mortified life, religious virtues, and apostolic zeal is one of the ost important in the process of canonization. Our hero's travelling comcanion and fellow-religious, Father Moffet, was arrested in the course of that same year, tried and condemned to death; but his sentence was sub-sequently commuted by the king into that of perpetual banishment, with ain of death if he returned to Scot-nd. Toward the end of March, 1614. ather Ogilvie went to London, where seems to have stayed for two months, n business of a very serious and mys rious nature, apparently connected ith the king. The martyr's biograwith the king. The martyr's biogra-obers believe that certain words uttered by Father Ogilvie just before his death ntain an allusion to this secret mission. He then said that the Jesuits bad rendered the king a service reater than had ever been rendered to him by any Bishop or minister in the kingdom. If, as may possibly be the case, this "important service" was connected with the Father's embassy to London, the king, so proverbially forgetful of favors received, showed himself even more ungrateful than usual in his subsequent conduct toward the Jesuit missionary.

It was probably during his stay in London that Father Ogilvie paid a flying visit to his Provincial, Father Gordon, who resided in Paris. We gather from a letter written by the Provincial to the General of the Society, in April, 1614, that he seems to have been some-what alarmed at the apparent unconsciousness of danger with which the youngScotchman undertook the journey to Paris. He knew how closely watched were the movements of the Catholics, of the priests especially ; and that, even in the French ports there were paid spies, whose duty it was to give notice strained them by his authority and by to the Government of the arrival of main force.' The prisoner, still stunned and any traveller whose priestly character bleeding from the blows he had rewas suspected. Absolute indifference to danger was one of Father Ogilvie's ceived, was robbed of his books, money and relics, and carried off to the Tol-booth prison to spend the night. The characteristics : it came to him as a heritage from a long line of warlike lairds. But if this fearlessness somecruel treatment he had received had not broken his spirit; and the keeper of the prison observed that he was "a strange sort of man," very unlike times excited the anxiety of his superior, it served him well later on, and enabled him to defy, with a smiling countenance and a dauntless heart, the the usual prisoners; whereupon Father Ogilyia made answer: "They are worst perils and sufferings that im-Ogilvie made answer : afraid of being taken and punished, agination can conceive.

latter had half recovered from his sur- operations. When he saw the man- this purpose Father James Moffet and accustomed to say his Breviary and king a long letter. He described the accustomed to say his Breviary and make his meditation. But in spite of his care to avoid observation it was difficult to escape from the prying curiosity of his Protestant neighbors ; "boots" be used to make the prisoner and we shall see later on how a woman who had watched him repeating his prayers in an unknown tongue, acused him of practising magical arts. Early in October of that same year— 614 – Father Ogilvie went to Glasgow, where he arrived dressed as a soldier If Edinburgh was a post of danger for Catholic priest, Glasgow was perhaps yet more full of perils. King James I had only recently re-established the Scottish episcopacy, according to the form of the Anglican Church. His object was to neutral-ize the revolutionary tenden-cies of the national "Kirk," whose independent theories in matters of relig ion inspired him with almost as much fear as the profession of faith of his "Papist" subjects. The new Bishops lately appointed by the King possesse but little authority. They had re-cently been the first to oppose the re establishment of the Scotch episcopacy ; and it was shrewdly suspected bishop, had helped in no small measure to modify their opinions on the subject. At any rate, from being violently opposed to the sovereign's spiritual jurisdiction, they were now most eager to atone for the that the large revenues bestowed up-on them by the king, with the title of Bishop, had helped in no small past by an excess of zeal in the king's service.

Spottiswood, the new Archbishop of Glasgow, was a fair example of this class of men, among whom, in return for the honors and riches bestowed upon them, James found instruments docile to his will. Spottiswood, whose morals were far from exemplary, and whose religious opinions had changed as best suited his worldly interests, was aware that the safest way to gain the king's favor was to effect a violent hatred of the Catholics in general, and of the Jesuits in particular. The capture of one so remarkable as Father Ogilvie would be considered, he well new, as a striking and efficient proof of his zeal in his sovereign's service At Spottiswood's instigation, a plot was concocted to entrap the Jesuit missionary during his stay in Glasgow. A man of good position, named Adam Boyd, consented to act a traitor's part. By feigning an ardent desire to embrace the true faith he succeeded in gaining the Father's confidence Father Ogilvie consented to meet him at an appointed place, for the purpose of giving him the necessary religious instruction previous to re-ceiving him into the Church. Boyd informed the Archbishop of the tim and place of his meeting with the un-suspecting Jesuit ; and on the 14th of October, in the afternoon, Father Ogilvie, who was still disguised as a oldier, was arrested on the public square of Glasgow. In his own ac count of his imprisonment the martyr has related these events and those that followed. We shall often quote his words. In their simplicity and straightforwardness, they give us a true picture of his character and de-meanor. meanor. The prisoner was then taken to the house of the magistrate. Spottiswood hastened there with a large company. 'He called me out," says Father Ogil vie. "I obeyed, and he struck me a blow, saying: 'You are an over-inblow, saying: 'You are an over-in-solent fellow to say your Masses in a reformed city.'--I replied: 'You do not act like a Bishop, but like an executioner, in striking me.' Then, as though the signal had been thus given them, they showered their blows from all sides upon me; the hair was plucked from my beard, my face was torn with their nails, until Count Fleming re-reveal the names of those who had re-ceived and befriended him since his arrival in Scotland. With fiendish malice he worked upon the king's naturally suspicious temper, magnify-ing Father Ogilvie's arrest into an event of almost political importance, which closely concerned the sovereign's personal safety and influence.

3

Early next morning Spottiswood sent forth emissaries, with injunctions to discover the place where his prisoner had lodged. They succeeded in finding the inn where he had a room ; and, alas owing to the treachery of a Frenchman, were able to lay hands on his lug gage, part of which had been carried off by one of his friends. Among his belongings were certain papers of im portance - one written by Father Patrick Anderson, the other by Father Murdock, two very eminent Scotch missionaries. These papers contained a great number of names and addresses, and a list of articles belonging to the Jesuits in Scotland. With these papers, the Archbishop's messengers took sev-to the Archbishop's palace, "I am brought up;" he writes, "ill as I still am from the blows of the previous day, and with unusual trembling upon me. Nevertheless, in spite of his physical weakness and fatigue, the confessor bore himself brayely and resolutely. TO BE CONTINUED.

CURED BY TAKING

AVER'S Sarsa-"I was afflicted for eight years with Salt Rheum. During that time, I tried a great many medicines which were highly rec-omniended, but none gave me relief. I was at hast advised to try Ayer's Sarsa-parilla, and before I had finished the fourth bottle, my hands were as

Free from Eruptions

as ever they were. My business, which is that of a cab-driver, requires me to be out in cold and wet weather, often without gloves, but the trouble has never returned."— THOMAS A. JOHNS, Stratford, Ont.

Ayer's The Sarsaparilla Admitted at the World's Fair. Ayer's Pills Cleanse the Bowels.

THE CATHOLIC RECORD

osing himself ement toward provoke me. aroused. In nave my way easonable. Listen while is very short), really wish to up my papers thout another iless and stood But the ion. ing stranger, nd determined nervous little uld have cared he other. "Is andalous," reurdly resolving as soon as he him in charge ist in this outyou regret it." nswered with a chance the con a seat while I irst !"

1.

12

11

.

intruder with ath, Mr. Quillet rm chair. He d assistance by s deterred from ons - first, that every inch the sonal violence ; ave made himther ridiculous as well as the was to remain and give him in e left the house. illet most firmly ded his roll of to read, taking ne other's sulky oice was musical gh, Mr. Quillet o himself. re was something the end of five listener had forto accept-well, the less squeamish. But you have your chance.

" Pride is not concerned in the mat ter," replied Mr. Quillet. "But how can I bring myself to put my name to ask ?' another man's work? It would be a species of literary forgery." "Nothing of the sort," was the ener-" The play is my own in getic reply. "The play is my own in every sense. I have an incontestable it every to you. Will right to make it over to you. Will you take it, or will you not? "Upon my word," was the hesitat-ing rejoinder, "I-I-that is - in point of fact "- point of fact — "I can't wait," interposed the stranger briskly. "I must have 'yes' or 'no 'at once. If the former, well and good ; if the latter, I take it else-where immediately. Which it it to

"Well, really, if you are bent on "Well, really, if you are bent on giving it away," answered Mr. Quillet, "I suppose I may as well profit by it as any one else.

"Yes, considerably better, from your standpoint. Very good! Then you accept the piece on the conditions named

"I do," replied Mr. Quillet, after some reflection. He was not prepared to reject this extraordiary offer then and there, but he reserved (mentally) to himself the right of cancelling his verbal acceptance by letter, if he deemed it wiser on mature consideraother, taking up his hat, and rising to go. "I will not detain you longer now. Probably I shall call on you een seen upon the London stage. again shortly. Billhurst was in great spirits. He bewill leave me your name and address, in case I wish to communicate with you ?

"Yes, and I came here at once. What do you propose to do, may I "God knows. I'm sure the understudy will make a hash of it, "groaned the manager. "Most probably. Now, I'm going to make a startling proposition to you. Intrust me with the part." "You?" ejaculated the manager.

" Do you know anything about act-"A great deal. But try me and see," said the other, confidently. "Come, I will rehearse that scene in the third act for your benefit now !" The manager said nothing, but he and Mr. Quillet exchanged glances.

Taking their silence for consent this extraordinary man started his self suggested rehearsal. In five minutes the manager's rueful face was elated, flushed, eager, with new hope.

"By heaven!" he exclaimed ex-sitedly. "Repeat that on the stage, Mr. What's your name, and we'll make the piece a magnificent success yet !"

They did. The first night's audience received the new tragedy with enthusiastic favor.

actor-before the curtain again and again. He was certainly splendid. The wonderful realism with which he tion. "That is right," answered the played Mephistopheles was, said the next day's newspapers, as convincing a performance of its kind as had ever

Stay," cried Mr. Quillet. "You

The stranger shook his head.

"No," he said, with an inscrutable k. "I'm afraid I can't. I have mankind ably disposed toward himself and all In 1612 there were but few priests left in Scotland ; and, as we have seen, 100K. Im Airaid I can t. I have particular reasons for secrecy, which I cannot now explain. You shall learn more about me by and by. For forced into this cab by three burly-But at the stage door he saw a sight learn more about me by and by. For the present I prefer to keep my iden-tity concealed." He rose, bowed to Mr. Quillet, and hurriedly left the room. Before the, by, apparently superintending these of the Scotch Jesuits, knew for certain notice ; and in the daytime he used to

In June, 1614, we find Father Ogilbut I glory in my cause." That night Spottiswood wrote the vie back in Edinburgh ; and the tes-timony of William Sinclair, to which

Dr. Shields, an eminent physician of Tennessee, says : "I regard Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best blood medicine we have alluded, informs us that he remained there about three months, during which he did much good among the persecuted Catholics, on earth, and I know of many wonder ful cures effected by its use." Physic whose courage and endurance he kept up by his words and example ans all over the land have made simi His talent as a controversialist and his lar statements.

These two desirable qualifications, pleas nt to the taste and at the same time effect al, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worn Exterminator. Children like it. sweet, winning manner enabled him to gain considerable influence even among the heretics, a certain number The body must be well nourished now, to prevent sickness. If your appetite is poor take Hood's Sarsaparilla. of whom he brought back to the Church. Among his friends and converts we find many well-known Scotch names - Maxwell, Citicura Wallace, Eglington - together with others less known to the world, but no less glorious in the sight of Heaven.

A warm shampoo with Cuticura Soap, and a single application of Cuticura (ointment), the great Skin Cure, clear the scalp and hair of crusts, scales, and dand-ruff, allay itching, soothe irritation, stim-ulate the hair follicles, and nourish the roots, thus producing Luxuriant Hair, with a clean, wholesome scalp. Our hero's life during those busy months was one of constant peril. He said Mass before daybreak, to avoid and

The choicest and most acceptable of gifts, consisting of Catholic Home Annual, illustrated, . 25c, Toronto Catholic Almanac, . . 25c

An extensive assortment of

Prayer Books

In all styles and prices, from the cheapest children's editions upwards.

Prayer Beads

In wood, cocoa, pearl, amber, etc., with cocoa, leather and pearl cases.

Crosses and Crucifixes

In all sizes, prices and designs, Stat-ues, Fonts and Religious Articles.

Religious Pictures

Plain or colored, oil chromo or oleograph.

Tales, Stories or Books in Setts

Profusely illustrated Toy Books. Xmas and New Year Booklets.

D. & J. SADLIER & CO.

Catholic Publishers, Booksellers and Sta-tioners, Church Ornaments, Vestments, Statuary and Religious Articles, 1669 Notre Dame St. | 115 Church St. MONTREAL. | TORONTO.

DR. WOODRUFF, NO. 185 QUEEN'S AVE. Defective vision, impaired hearing, nasal catarrb and troublesome throats. Eyes tested, glasses adjusted. Hours, 13 to 4.