Instead of the great Canadian question, whose solution is imperatively demanded, we are descending into a war of factions, and we distinctly foresee that another bloody struggle is at hand, as the result of this factions policy, in which Mr. Lafontaine and his subservient memtains would do well to remember, that in this contest, which his folly is bringing on, the Lower Canadian British will side with the Upper Cana-

Beitish American Leagus, and elle expressions of opinion which its publication have ellected, furnish unquestionable evidence that the public mind in Canada has been drawn aside from the sterile conflicts which frittered away the manhood of the country, and that, emerging from the mists and prejudices which frittered away the manhood of the country, and that, emerging from the mists and prejudices which clouded even intelligence and patriotism, it is elevated by loftier aspirations and nobler instincts. Few can fail to remark the mastery which pressing exigencies exercise in binding the obstinate pride of consistency, and foreing the antagonism of race, of language, and of education, to forget its wrongs, and foreing the antagonism of race, of language, and of education, to forget its wrongs, and foreing the antagonism of race, of language, and of education, to forget its wrongs, and foreing the antagonism of race, of language, and of education, to forget its wrongs, and foreign the future, which we wish to penetrate, yields but the future, which we wish to penetrate, yields but the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither represent nor applicably the conference of each other on promise of a stern impartiality. We neither represent nor applicably the conference of the future, which we wish to penetrate, yields but the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither represent nor applicant the expression and independent of heading, and let us now look to the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither represent the promise of the future, which we wish to penetrate, yields but the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither represent the promise of the future which we wish to penetrate, yields but the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither represented the promise of the future which we wish to penetrate, yields but the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither reproach nor applicant the confessions of peat error, with which every succeeding manifesto teems; future, which we wish to penetrate, yields but the promise of a stern impartiality. We neither reproach not applicat the confessions of past errors, with which severy acceeding maintiest teems; as reasonably might we exact the etiquette of the quarter-deck from the struggling survivors on the settle, inextroble accessity arges us to action, and sentimental attachments less their vitality when solf-preservation becomes a daty. The angunerous task may be assumed by those with palm constitutely and deception upon the ignorant, of upoparity and deception upon the ignorant, of upoparity and deception upon the ignorant, of upoparity and deception of life has its instruments, sent-server condition of life has its instruments, sent-server condition of life has its instruments, sent-server condition of life has its instruments, sent-server, condition of life has its instruments, which select the server of the pense for labor, whether mercantic, manufacturing, or agricultural, which will setum every man a fair day's wages for a fair day's work. It may be demonstrated with the securacy with which a mathematical problem is solved, that there is not a department of mountry in Counds which can be profitably exercised, while we are fettered with Imperial restrictions, and exposed to the higher standard of wages which attract our laborers to the United States. If Canada, were situated like Norfolk Island, a thousand miles removed from any land, and our population confined by insuperside difficulties of exit from the soil, the price of labor, and the value of the products of that labor, would bear some affinity. Situated us we are, we pay the penalty which the prosperity of the Republic imposes, and we cannot emancipate ourselves from our unavoidable inferiority, inless we enter the American Union, or, in humble imitation of the example of our neighbore, result to a Foderal Union, which would mask that separation which the suggestion implies. Admitting the relactures, not yet extinguished in many breasts, to reliminate an allegiance consecrated by so many answering resolutions, the alternative offers itself, of imposing leavy protecting datas to feater local marufactures, thus investing the Cabinea with ample means of corruption, while we perpetuate a coeff.

There cannot be a question that Free Trade, under such an aspect, would elevate Gaebec and Montreal into powerful and opulent cities, and that the St. Lawrence would become what anter intended it for—the highway of nations; while it may be questioned whether local labor; surrounded by the necessaries of life at the lowest price, would not be able to compete, and the lowest price, would not be able to compete, and the result is which state of the presentive articles, with other nations. We are shackled now with the onerous attributes of a preventive service, fluctuating, insufficient, and distrusted; yet the principles upon which it is based are inoperative to attract commerce through our internal navigation, and we are constrained to reduce the tollic deals of the public debt is raised by indirect inariation. It is plainly unnecessary to comment on the Governor-General's Speech, for there is not a unterest in retaining the exclusive privilege of navigating the St. Lawrence; actuated by motives of interest in the one case, you have a heavy bill of the part of the pression of the traditions of the traditions of the traditions of the traditions of the other. they have letters from New Orleans, from sources entitled to full confidence, announcing that seveowever, destined to invade Cuba. They asser that the expedition consists of from four to five thousand men, well armed, and with abundant pecuniary means, commanded by Generals Lopez and Gonzales. Great care has been taken to keep which her pit themselves against the desires of the mass the affair secret, but it was believed that spice of the Upper Canadian population. Mr. Lafou- had communicated all their plans to the Cuban Authorities. If this be the case, a very few days will bring us authentic intelligence. The following is the only notice of the affair taken by the contest, which his folly is bringing on, the Lower Canadian British will side with the Upper Canadians, and that he will not be supported by the intelligent of his own countymen in an attempt to continue what is, in reality, priestly domination. The times are against him—popular opinion is adverse to extending the power of priesthood by permitting it to hold or to control large endowments is land, or by forming itself into powerful Corporations. There is in the minds of men a strong disposition to the voluntary system, or the support of Ministers of religion hy the congregations to which they belong. Anything beyond this is, in fact, to create an establishmed Church, or what is almost worse, a set of Church, or what is almost worse, a set of Churches; and as such establishments support of less dependent on this Government, they, in return, add to the power of that Government, they, in return, add to the power of that Government, they in return, and thereby take so much power from the people. In this Parliament, subservient as it is, Mr. Lafontains will probably defeat the Bill for the secularization of the Clergy Reserves, but he will ruin the Ministry of which he is the leader, and open up an agitation more deaperate and determined than Canada has yet seen. The Upper Canadians have their eyes open now, and will not submit to his dictation on a question peculiarly their own.

Toronto, May 13, 1850.

Parliament meets to morrow. For two or three days past Members have been arriving in the city. The fitting up of the Parliament buildings was completed on Saturday; and at night both houses were illuminated, for the special benefit of the good people of Toronso, many of whom went to see the elephant. The large-glass chandelier, in the Assembly Room contains 129 gas lights. Before Saturday night, I had no correct conception of what the Legislative Council Chamber would be like when the fixings were completed. It is fitted up in a style of great extravagance. The Bar of the House is composed of burnished brans; and the caricature throne, an indispensable appendage of the gilded mockery of delegated royalty, is, of course, a great affair. A shocking bad portrait of the Queen hangs on the West wall. The rows of seats I spoke of in a previous letter, are for the Members of Assembly when they visit the "Lords." The chairs of the Members are much the same as those in the other House, but desks there are none.

the Members are much the same as those in the other House, but deaks there are none.

If the Royal Speech, as it is styled by courtesy or custom, omits all reference to the Clergy Reserves, Cameron or Perry—I am sorry to say that poor old "Pete" is very unwell—will have to move an amendment, and then the fun will commence. Sir Allan McNab will take the ground that the Ministry went to the country on this question at the last Election, and that they are bound to take it up and settle it. The utilicular of the matter is this:—Lafentusine, who is indebted for his political status to the Priests of Lower Canada, is utterly opposed to any interference with the matter. Five Members of the Cabinet are opposed to his policy; but as "he con the conditions of the constitution of the matter is this:—Lafentusine, who is indebted for his political status to the Priests of Lower Canada, is utterly opposed to any interference with the matter. Five Members of the Cabinet are opposed to his policy; but as "he con the condition of the Clear Grits has placed the Cabinet are opposed to his policy; but as "he con the in a most embariassing dilemma. The obliged to submit to his will and plessure.

The tact of the Clear Grits has placed the Cabinet meetings in this city last week, is to be carried out. A Committee meeting of the Anti-diction of the public meeting, that the Clergy Reserves and Rectory questions should be made to the promise made at the public meeting, that the Priest of the promise made at the public meeting, but in vain; the majority of the Michigan at $4,81 @ $4,871. Reserves and account of the promise made at the public meeting, but in vain; the majority of the Committee nailed them to the point, and the two Secretaries were authorized to wait upon Mr. Baldwin to ascertain when he and his collengues could make it convenient to receive a deputation from the Committee. The reply was that he would confer with his collengues on the subject. Here the matter stands at present. Whatever may be the result, it cannot be denied that the Clear Grits proved an over-march for the Mainisterialists at the public meeting, which were, in fact, originated by the Ministry for theatrical effect, and as a means of getting themselves let down easy.

fact, originated by the Ministry for discrete fact, and as a means of getting themselves let down easy.

I have it on good authority that proceedings in Chancery have been, or are about to lie, commenced to test the validity of the Rectory Patents. There are various opinions respecting the legality of these Patents, and it is difficult to say which amongst them is the correct one, as the facts, on which these various opinions are founded, are somewhat controversed, and not at all clearly satisfied. One party has it that the Patents were signed in blank by Sir J. Colborne; but this remains to be proved. The constitutional question respecting the involability of a Patent from the Crown is by this time probably not surrounded with much difficulty. There seems to be something like a general admission that, whether the Patents were legally or illegally issued, the Rectors have acquired certain rights under them, and could not be disturbed during their lives, even though the Court of Chancery should prosounce the Patents illegal. I do not believe that the Chancery proceedings will result in any disturbance of the Rectories. The Chancellor is known to have expressed himself strongly in favor of the

we have expressed himself strongly in favor of the vested rights created by the Patents; but this was before he had chiefled his way to fortune.

The trial for Libel of the parties who signed the Petition to the Government praying for the dismissal from the Magistracy of his. Dinon, of the Coopen has been postponed all the Fall Assires. The Crown Selicitor stated that he was unable to go on, owing to the evidence not having here purpose of giving time to procure the accessary evidence.

NOTHER CALIFORNIA IN THE PACIFIC—FURTHER DISCOVERIES OF GOLD—THE EXCITEMENT AMONG THE AUSTRALIANS.

The feabella brings dates from Havann to the

which state, that a great overflow had occurred in the Brazos. ANOTHER CALIFORNIA IN THE PACIFIC-FUR-Our advices from South Australia are to the 15th f January. Adelaide papers of the 12th are re-next week.

It appears that gold has been found in small quantities, from time to time, by various parties in South Australia. For nearly two years past the process of exploration has been going on silently and cautiously, and the result is in the formation of these Companies, backed by some of the best names in the Colony, who guarantee the sober reality of what has hitherto been only a dream, "that gold exists in large quantities in the soil and alluvial deposits made by the rivers of South Australia." There are great expectations that Both Companies will be eminently successful, and that the Colony will be greatly enriched by these discoveres. The disportion which existed for emigrating to Catifornia had quite abated, and parties who had engaged passages were for feising their passage money, being convinced that they were going to a distance to seek that which was to be found at the door.

The whole line of the Onkaparinga is said to exhibit suriferous deposits, on which river the Australian Gold Company had secured various sections. In some parts it was expected that gold in large quantities would be found.—N. Y. Trib.
