In this regard she is said to be prepared to offer the countries named "honorable terms." In the first place how could anything be termed "honorable" which would involve a betrayal of John Bull, and in the second place, there is not the second place place is a timely one exercise is a timely one alightest indication with regard to either land that any such Judas kiss would be accepted. Why should it? The Old Land and her overseas peoples have stood by the cause of the fluits and sacrifice, and the British fleet from the first, right now, and for the future until the thing ends, is unreservedly recognized as the basic factor in the thwarting of the aspirations of the Huns—a factor without which the nation which has run amok would right now hold a triumphant would right which the nation which has run amok would right now hold a triumphant position. In the event of France and Russia accepting the suggestion—which they most emphatically won't—the plan of the Kaiser and his war lords is said to be to create such a menace with regard to the East that John Bull will be willing to yell for terms. He won't, not on your life. even if he should have to go the route alone, and this is not even the church, as we had to go round it.
