The "Longest Resident." The poverty of the English language is exemplated by a circular which is making the rounds of a suburb and invites subscriptions to a testimonial to the station master. It comes from one who styles himself "the longest resident," the sad physical fact being that he is probably the shortest, although in bulk and rotundity he makes up for the inches he lacks in height. Here is a case in which the very clumsiness of the German language would be an in-estimable help, for then this gentleman could quite correctly describe himself "the for-the-longest-time-herein residing" or even perhaps "the for-the-longest-time-herein-residingest" individ-ual. # HAT TRICKS OF M.P'S

REMARKABLE WAY OF CINCHING "SEAT" IN BRITISH COMMONS.

Hat May Become an Ornament of Debate - How Sir Frank Lockwood's Utility Hat Held the Fort For Him -Two-Hat Trick Spoiled by Over Popularity - A Member's Corporeal Presence Is Necessary Now.

It is one thing to possess a hat, and another to know what to do with ft. In the British House of Commons the rules and regulations concerning hats are many and varied. For instance, an honorable member may wear a hat while in his seat, but he must on no account put it on before he gets there, and he must take it off as he leaves and he must take it off as he leaves.

A member sauntering in and out of the sacred precincts with his hat on would raise a din loud enough to awaken the seven sleepers, and catch the Bpeaker's eye into the bargain. Another rule concerning hats is that when the House has been cleared for a division, a member is not permitted to address the Speaker without a hat on. They do say that on one occasion and he must take it off as he leaves.

on. They do say that on one occasion the G.O.M. could have worn a bucket or a punch-bowl without being wholly lost to sight and memory dear; but that is another story.

An M. P. can do things with a top-hat which he could do but ingloriously and ineffectively with a cap. There is no glovy in a cap and this is why. is no glory in a cap, and this is why Mr. Keir Hardle has never attained unto the same. A top-hat can be utilized as a repository for a written speech or a hidden newspaper, both luxuries forbidden.

Ornament of Debate.

It may even be sat upon to give finish and eclat to a peroration, and in this way it has become an ornament of debate in many a maiden speech. You can drop down on a cap after asking a searching question on the political situation in Timbuctoo, and it is still gaolers stole his never-mention-thems once did a fine oratorical perform ance with a top-hat. It is a detail that the glory was accidental, and that the hat was not his own. He was orating on the woes of Erin, and, raising ating on the woes of Erin, and, raising his hand with one of those mighty gestures which have given him a reputation and a name, he drove home his argument with such thrilling force on the headgear of a "gintleman from the sister isle" that the House began to wonder whether the honoroble member would ever be rescued. But the might lest record still belongs to C.-B., who has had the unspeakable honor of having his hat banged off his head, and trundled down the floor of the House twice in succession by a declamatory enthusiast who sat behind him.

Hat Held Fort For Him. Hat Held Fort For Him.

Those were days when you could get even more out of a top-hat when you tried hard than you can to-day. The hat-trick was then a lovely, subtle ingenious thing. One day the late Sir Frank Lockwood, lawyer, good fellow, and gentleman through and through, dropped into the House at five o'clock in the morning, left a utility hat which he kept for the purpose in his locker, drove to his chamber, read up the case of Regina versus somebody or other, of Regina versus somebody or other, had breakfast at the Cock, and then went up to the Old Balley Court and cheated the gallows of his respected client. All the while his utility hat had been holding the fort for him.

When he entered the House again an Irish member, crowded out of the seats below, was requesting the ruling of the Speaker on the point whether a member could deposit one hat in his seat, and then leave the House to pursue his ordinary avocations in another hat, while another poor fellow, crowded out, was driven to address the House from the roof. The Speaker ruled against two hats for one head, and so Lockwood relented. That was Sir Frank Lockwood's own account, and part of When he entered the House again an Lockwood's own account, and part of it at all events, is history.

Two-Hat Trick Spoiled. While it lasted, the two-hat-trick could not be beaten; but, like all good things, it was spolled by over-popularity. Busy merchants and stock-brokers used to enter the House with squash hats under their arms, inflate ye're dangerously old."

Then probably you know the evils

The probably you know the evils

From hats it got to gloves. The ra-

From hits it got to gloves. The rather startling Dr. Tanner once entered the House with an armful of hats to peg out claims for Erin, and when he had used them up, took off his coat, and made an effort to set up freehold and ancient rights for the seat it covered. The wicked say, too, that on the intro-duction of the Home Rule Bill, Mr. duction of the Home Rule Bill, Mr.
Austen Chamberlain swooped down to Westminster in a four-wheeler full of hats, and that he deposited them in the House as far as they would go.
Of course, this sort of thing could net be allowed. It was not cricket, and the Speaker made the rule of one man one

But ingenious are the wicked. Sir Charles Dilke and the genial Labouchere, who ere he departed the precincts long contributed to the galety of nations, concocted a conspiracy. One summer's afternoon, Mr. Sydney Gedge, peering furtively through outspread peering furtively through outspread fingers while at prayers, saw Sir Charles Dilke hurrying in, and not on-ly place his own eard in the receptacle at the back of his seat, but also place the Laboucherian care in the care the Laboucherian card in the recepta-cle at the back of the Laboucherian cle at the back of the Laboucherian seat, the Labouchere being absent.

Then, injutity of injutities, he saw Sir Charles fold his hands, bend his head, and assume an attitude of plous devotion. This defiance of rule, precedent, and sanctity so upset Mr. Gedge that he called the attention of the Speaker to what he had seen through parted fingers, with the result that all duplicity of the kind was for ever forbidden, and now, hat or no hat, if a member would make sure of a seat, he must hie him forth to prayers, not by aubstitute, but in corporeal presence.

NEAR MIDNIGHT SUN.

Baseball Games at Edmonton Began at 8.30 p. m. and Daylight Lasted Till Nearly Eleven o'Clock.

In his sixth letter from the Canadian Northwest the special commissioner of the New York Post writes in part as follows: Crossing the Gilbert Plains, we saw our first Northwest Mounted policeman. We brought him into the car and man. We brought him into the car and asked him questions. In a strangs country the most reliable sources of information are cab drivers, barbers, and policemen. Lake, for that was the constable's name, proved no exception to the rule. He had been down to Brandon with a violently insane man, and had not slept for two days and night. His adventures with his charge were a story in themselves.

He was stationed at Fort Saskatchewan, twenty miles from this point, and one of the things that he told us stuck in our minds—that on guard duty in June he had read a newspaper until 10.45 o'clock in the everthy before the light falled, and had resumed his reading at 1.30 in the morning, when the sun was shining again. This sounded sun was shining again. This sounded too much like an Arctic tale to be true. But the first thing seen in Edmonton was a large banner stretched across the street, bearing this inscription. "Baseball to-night at 8.30." The adver-

Issue to the baseball game after dinner to-night."

Edmonton is one of the big fur depots of the Northwest. The Hudson's Bay Co. has been in here for years, and now they have a competitor in Revillon Freeze, wheele Revillon Freres, whose trappers are working over the same territory with working over the same territory with the older company.

On the high hills above the river on which the city is built the prospect is pleasing to the eye. In the river be-low there are gold dredges seeking in a desultory sort of way to extract the precious dust from the sands of the river. "Farthest north" is the centre of an apparently rich farming district instead of a jumping-off place. The fields are diversified by frequent pieces of timber leads Coming ways. timber land. Coming north from Ed. monton over the miles of flat prairie dotted with raw frontier towns, the contrast is striking. If you have ever seen Ashtabula, O., where so many people were killed in the famous week, you have seen Edmonton.

At a guess, though, Ashtabula has not eleven banks on its principal thoroughfare, each housed in a commodious brick building of its own. Nor is it any hotter in Chattanooga to-day than it is here, thousands of miles to the north. After you come within the zone of the warm winds from the Japan current, latitude ceases to be a factor in making temperature. While the land is new, the contrasts are startling. Within rifle shot of a railroad passenger office that could no be distinguished from the most spa-cious one on lower Broadway, I came upon an Indian family on their travels. First came the squaw pulling at the head of a reluctant piebald pack pony. head of a reluctant plebald pack pony. The second pony was drawing a travois loaded with outfit and surmounted by a baby. On the third pony was an Indian girl with the head-line of another pack pony, and bringing up the rear without burden or responsibility was the old Indian who was the head of the outfit. They were traveling across country to visit traveling across country to visis friends and paid not the sightest heed to our comments or presence. Edmonton had but 1,500 or 2,000 people in 1898, when the rush to the Yukon gave the town its first impetus to a larger growth. Notwithstanding, four years later the population had not increased. The Hudson's Bay Co. has had a trading post at Edmonton for more than a hundred years, but the Sastanders of the standard of the sastanders of katchewan River was the only outle to the world. Freights were prohibited. A keg of nails was worth $50. The greatest need of the town was a railroad. Time after time the citizens besought the Canadian Pacific to come to their aid. When the road finally decided to come in the come cided to come in, its officers concluded that they would save the cost of a bridge over the river by founding a new town on the opposite bank. Strathcona came into being, six miles away, and Edmonton was invited to cross over. Strathcona was at first called Edmonton, and the old town was calmly requested to give up its name.

The next enove of the railroad people was to request the Dominion Gov-

The next move of the railroad people was to request the Dominion Government to move the land office across the river. The loss of this institution, of course, meant the death of the town. However, the Federal Government is large to the first the to move when the citizens of Edmonto move when the citizens of Edmon-ton, with rifles, stopped the proceed-ings. The Mounted Police came in and averted bloodshed. The officer in charge persuaded the land agent not to move until an appeal had been made to Ottawa. The citizens of Edmon-ton posted armed sentries and waited. The Ottawa Government changed its mind and the land office stayed.

For fourteen years that followed the ingle ambition of Edmonton was to eep ahead of Strathcone in growth, despite the advantage the new town had in its railway connection. Now the Canadian Northern has come into Edmonton. The Grand Trumk Pacific will stop here, and it will be on the main line of "Jim" Hill's new Western Canada. Finally, the Janadian Pacific is building a high level bridge that will bring its line to Edmonton, and that without a single concession from the town that would have been glad to have donated any amount of land for this railway station at any time since the conflict began. Though Edmonton is the northernmest point in the Canadian Northern has come into Edmonton is the northeramost point in Alberta yet developed, it is south of the centre of this great province, more than half of which is still given over to the Hudson's Bay posts and to traders and hunters. It is the section of Western Canada next to be opened after Saskatchewan and the lower half of Alberta are filled with activations. of Alberta are filled with settlers.

an object lesson in the art of street cleaning. But the streets of Munich, that famous old Bavarian art, musical, dramatic and educational centre, are cleaned year in and year out solely by women, and no one wonders at it except the newly-arrival foreign student or tourist, says Ernest Sauer.

The street cleaners of Munich have been women for so long that if some one were to ask the worthy burgomaster when they first began to sweep the thoroughfares of the city he undoubtedly would first have to consult the municipal records in order to give an unimpeachable answer. But if he were to be asked, "Is it not strange to have women engaged in such work?" his reply in all probability would be what the reply of many a burgher of Munich has been to this very question:

"Is it not honest work and do not all men and all women have to work in order that they may live?"

pilgrim to this ancient seat of learning is at his first sight of skirted street sweepers, his wonder soon give way to a feeling of admiration for the work that the women do. For Munich's streets are among the cleanest in the world without a doubt. It is a city of over half a million inhabitants, yet walk where you will, you will not come across even a side street that is not worthy of comparison with the tradi-tional neatness of the new pin.
