Growing Old Gracefully. Hall Canvas, Stair

(By Rosaline Neish.) Of course, we poor women have to grow old (so do men, but it does not matter so much for them), but we should try not to show it more than we can help. It is a sad fact, but nobody wants a semi-old woman, al-though a really old woman is often very popular.

A message to the Furness With Company received yesterday stated the s.s. Canadian Trooper had pick her to this port for repairs. The mes-sage further added that the Otta's rudder stock is damaged, and that both ships are expected to make port

When your hair is snow white it may look delightful. When it is just "on the turn" it often looks singularly unattractive. It is the same of us when we are half young and half old. We do not want to settle down to old age, for we don't feel a bit old, yet, alas! we often look it.

Now, how can we best stave of the appearance of age? Not by dressing like a young girl. Elderly flappers, please note this. I have seen apparent girls tripping along rather painfully -and I have thought that is a smart girlle, and then "she" has turned around. Oh! shades of Rider Haggard's "She"- an old woman lined and painted and dyed, and so on, had put on a short skirt and high heels and false red hair and powder and paint, and she had added thereby a truly pitiful number to her years. It is no use; you cannot serve mint sauce with mutton when it wants red currant jelley. Do not be too skittish if you are getting on. Be sympathetic and cheery and kindly and humorous, but don't be a lambkin. Your gamboling days are over. We can to some extent avoid the appearance of old age, fiot by dressing too youngly, not by being too play-fully lamb-like, but by suitable clothes (and; if possible, suitable lights) and by avoiding all sorts of things. Not reaching old age before we need requires many don't's. Here are some Don't overdress or underdress. Don't paint unless you do 'it very skilfully.

Don't be sarcastic—it gives you such a nasty expression. Don't make faces-you do this far more often than you are aware of. Don't neglect your skin or your

Don't let your voice grow harsh

Don't over-eat. Don't sleep too much.

Don't dwell in the past and always be comparing the present to the past, to the disadvantage of the former. Don't condemh youth.

There are heaps more don'ts, but here are some of the do's: Do be kind and gentle and sympathetid.

Do smile and try to be an optimist. Keep cheery, and take a vivid interest in everything and everybody.

Do keep your enthusiasm for life, for love, for children, and nowers, and for the tender sunshine, and for God's sweet flowers, and above all, be young in spirit as long as you can.

Never be childish, but try to keep childlike in mind and soul. Put away all thoughts of age and sickness and wedriness and contention.

Do your best to keep the priceless companionship of the Spirit of Youth and it will shed its radiance on your slowly, instead of your guickly, ageing for short, feel young and you will look young, long after wour grumbling, pessimistic, condemnatory friends have grown old and unattractive, for late youth and early old age are more riess a question of the spirit than the body, and of thought than flesh and blood.—London Dally Express.
