ter and May's, on Wednesday, the 26th, inst. As May said she would be over to see me soon I thought I would wait until she did come, rather than write a letter. But an experience of this afternoon, has brought me the point of writing a few lines. Since my boyhood days, I have read much; heard a great many public speakers, clerical and lay; have seen a few stirring dramas of the stage and screen; but my memory does not recall anything which so touched my heart as a photodrama which it was my privilege,-and the privilege of the other inmates, as well as a large number of persons from the outside-to witness this afternoon .. It was William Fox's photoplay "Over the Hill." It is a photodrama from the poema of Will Carleton, in which a selfsacrificing mother's acts move one to tears. I did not catch the name of the woman who acts the part of the mother; but in my humble opinion, she is the most superb actress of the silent drama to-day.

those who have mothers still living will have a greater appreciation of a mother's all and ever sacrificing love; and if mother has departed this life, not let a day go as long as life on earth is premitted us, without a prayer to our Heavenly Father for the bit of Divine Love He gave us in-our Mothers.

No doubt those who were instrumental in securing this photoplay for us, fully grasped the appeal it would have to prisoners' hearts. It will be the talk of this place for many a day. I wish we had more of the meral appeal kind such as that of this afternoon. I say "moral appeal," because it appeals to the tenderest sentiments in a man. And when you can reach man's heart, the man so reached is deserving of a hetter fate than long years behind stone and steel. I do hope May will see this picture. it is being shown at Tremont Temple. The lady who takes the part of the mother looks and acts so much like our own long-suffering, self-sacrificing mother, that I am sure May will better understand the good, true loving mother we had, and will make a better mother of May.

Our mother is gone; father is still with us. Father had his faults, but he is our father just the same; he never was such a father, though, as the father in this picture. The father in the picture let his son do three years for him; while our father was never a thief. I know father has reached the years where labour is out of the question; and I also know it is asking too much of you to expect that you should look after your own family and keep him too. I know the law in regard to the obligation of children to support aged parents; I am also conscious of my moral duty to do so, and shall be only too glad to live up to my legal and moral duty to help support him if given a chance. Moth-er has died since I have been here; are they going to keep me till father dies too? Oh, May! Cannot you get someone to soften the hearts of the Parole Board?

Time forces me to close. I await your coming, May. I have addressed this to Frank, but it can be seen that it is for both,

Love to all. Advt. Your friend, sincerely,

There is a tendency toward using one color in an outfit. Hat, shoes and tockings should match the predominant dolor of the frock even the handbags, umbrella and gloves are often of the same color. . The effect is very good just now.
