SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

THE JUST IN-LAWS.

My friend, Jean P., is getting a divorce from her husband. Nothing unusual in that is there? But here is the unusual detail in the sadly usual little domestic drama. While she is getting the divorce Jean is staying with her husband's mother and sister who are very fond of her.

They are sorry that she does not feel that she can put up with Robert any longer but they cannot blame her. They have known Robert longer than she has, they know how selfish he is in the pursuit of his own pleasure, how utterly undependable in his promises, how ruthless in his tempers. And they have known Jean long enough to know how patient she is, how faithful, how unselfish, how sunny of disposition.

And so when after the last miserable episode in which he haunted and humiliated her, Jean felt that she wanted to be free they asked her to come and stay with them that the world might know they were standing by her.

AN Honor To Them.

All honor to them, I say. I never heard of one of these rare cases where the in-laws stand by the one who is not related to them because they feel that he or she has justice on his side, without a glow of pride and approval. Pride in a fellow being who can put justice above family loyalty.

I suppose one of the reasons why mothers-in-law are apt to cause trouble is that most of them are always ready to spring to the defense of their own without the slightest consideration of whether their own are right or not. This naturally causes a bitter resentment in the in-law, which continues long after these twain have made up their own differences.

One mother-in-law who had made a success of the job once told me that she made up her mind always to support her daughter-in-law in any argument if it appealed to me. I should say an even better rule would be to stay out altogether, but then I have never been a mother-in-law.

Always Ready to Applaud Him.

I was at the home of a woman one day when her in-laws were visiting her. Her husband was jollying her about some little mistakes of hers, and when she tried to justify herself he pushed the jollying a little too far and rather ragged her. I doubt, though, if she would have minded it from him for they are used to a brisk give and take, but the way in which the sister and mother-in-law greeted his every word with the applause of derisive laughter was truly maddening. Especially as it was obvious from some of their comments that they really did not understand his point at all, and as she really had much right on her side. After that I did not wonder that she does not get on with her in-laws.

Family loyalty has its uses and its abuses.

It is at its finest I think when tempered by a sense of justice and the rights of others.

Two Kinds Of Standing By.

It is splendid for people to stand by their own through thick and thin, if they stand by at their own cost to help against misfortune; and not to justify where there is no justice and where the rights of others are involved.

I think a wave of sympathy went through the country for the parents of those degenerate youths in Chicago when people realized that they were not using their wealth in an effort to free their sons from the consequences of their acts. Anyway one likes to think it was some sense of justice and the rights of society which made them willing that their children should be shut up where they could do no more harm.

Lizard Taken From a Man's Stomach

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 29.—Believe it or not, but surgeons in Winnipeg recently removed a lizard from the stomach of a man who until a year ago was manager of one of the local banks.

For more than twenty years, the parasite is said to have lived in the man's stomach, sapping his vitality and during the past year threatened his life.

Medical men familiar with the case claim the lizard developed from an egg which entered the stomach during a visit to the "ole swimmin' hole" in boyhood days. It had kept him this all his life.

Various examinations and operations had been performed, but it was not until an illness this summer that the parasite was discovered. It was removed by an operation and since that time the patient has made remarkable physical recovery and has grown fat.

From boyhood, the patient is reported to have had a ravenous appetite and afflicted also with terrific thirst. "He drank more water than anyone I ever knew," his father said in speaking of the unusual case.

BEFORE THE DAWN.

The darkest hour, O weeper, is just before the dawn; the agony grows deeper, and then, behold, it's gone; the bright sun comes up smiling, the prospects are beguiling, the fragrant breeze is plucking rose petals on the lawn. How often I have muttered, "All mortal things are snared; the house of hope is shuttered and closed up for repairs; there's no relief before me, grim bogies come and sore me, each hour new troubles bore me, and biff me unawares." And just when things were tougher than any gent could thole, and I, ordained to suffer, had midnight in my soul, I found my woes dispersing; the fates I had been cursing, the grouch I had been nursing, were straightway 'in the hole. When I look back at sorrows that once beset my ways, and made me dread to-morrow and swear at yesterdays, I wonder why I brooded, and thought my life denuded of hope when they intruded—I wonder, in amazement, the passing years have brought me dim eyes and toothless gums, but they at least have taught me that morning always comes; and when the light has threaded through cloudbanks thin and shredded, the Dead Sea Fruits we dreamed we find are merry plums.
