If He Committed Crime In Canada He Must Stand Consequences.

[Canadian Press.]

New York, Feb. 3 .- The World this morning says editorially: No international complications can possibly result from the attempt of a Railroad bridge which spans the St.

Croix River. The man is a foreign subject, who ada and committed a crime. Then he eturned to the United States, where he was arrested. The Canadian authorties demand his extradition, and the United States Government will naturally grant the request. He will be taken back to Canada, which has jurisdiction over his crime, and be tried for the offence that he has committed.

No "Political" Excuse. The fact that he calls himself a German officer, and pretends that his criminal exploit was a political act, is no oncern of the United States. He might have gone over to Canada and robbed a bank, or forged a check, or killed a policeman, and called it a political but the United States Government would be unlikely to agree with him.

If one German subject in the United States, having crossed the Canadian oundary and committed a crime, could lawfully demand the protection of the American Government, 200,000 German subjects in the United States could cross the frontier, commit 200,000 crimes against Canada, and pretend that they had been engaged in political exploits not subject to the penal code. Penitentiary Crime.

The time has not yet come when aliens temporarily in the United States have rights and privileges superior to the rights and privileges of American Blowing up bridges is not commonly interpreted in this country as a political act. Several noted Labor leaders are serving terms in the penitentiary similar offences, and even they did not pretend that dynamite was merely political in its effects. Germans who wish to cross from the United States into Canada and commit crimes of violence will have to take their chances with the Canadian courts. ## Week after week as the casualty lists have been published, I have beheld with profoundest admiration and pride the sublime fortitude of the families whose hearts were stricken with grief at the loss of their loved ones. However utter may be their secret desolation of heart, they give no outward expression to their sorrow. Such fortitude is worthy the memories of their fallen heroes, and, coupled with their Christian faith leads them on to greater heights than ever of holy courage and unconquerable will. But how is it going to be when the inevitable "lists" appear of the casualties to our Canadian troops? 'Tis not a new experience for many of these brave English parents to scan with fear and trembling the fateful record, nor yet a strange emotion that grips them as they find the name they feared, yet orayed might not be there. It is to them an added sacrifice to one more of the same kind already made. and after the first stunning shock, their souls rise triumphant over mortal pain sublime in their faith, in their love and in their resignation But what of the mothers of our Canadian boys, the wives of our Canadian men, who for the first time are brought face to face with the greatest sacrifice that war demands -to them would I send an earnest ssage to be prepared and fortified against the first great heartshocks of the war lists.

I say be prepared. Think of it all quietly and calmly. But the glory of it all, the honor, the pride of it all! A memory sweet and lovely-as it is noble and inspiring. The loved ame inscribed forever upon

Empire's scroll of honor. How different that from the memories carried by a mother whose son has gone down in sin and shame as countless thousands do in years of voluptuous peace. So what I would urge is a preparedness of heart and mind, a renewing of covenant, a noble re-solve to be brave whatever comes, knowing that your loved one has played a man's part, and that as a man, and a hero, he is remembered and loved alike by friends at home and comrades in the field, while a grateful Empire proudly owns him as its son and its defender, granting his name an everlasting place in the honored annals of the nation. In conclusion, may I say that, be ing resident here in London, it will be a great pleasure for me to be of any service to anxious ones in procuring where possible informati Werner Van Horn, accused of blowing
