It was taxation to meet Berlin, via London, Feb. 24-11:32 a.m. the deficits caused by the treasury the present Government had found over flowing, and had depleted by reckless and wasteful extravagance. He deeme absolutely indefensible to have asked for $140,000,000 this year, from the taxpayers, when, had the finances of the country been conducted on a rational, economical and sound business basis, no special taxation would have been necessary, even at this juncture. He recalled the fact that in the political campaign of 1911 the present movement and its supporters had publicly recognized the excellent conditions left by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when they campaigned Worst Cold or Sore Throat Where can you find so powerfully on the theory of "let well enough alone," searching a relief as Nerviline for a bad taking the ground that trade was all cold? the fact that Canadian imports were Raise Tariff Higher.

"Well, now," said Mr. MacLean, "you have the imports less than the exports. I ask gentlemen opposite how they like the new condition. Gentlemen opposite complain that the revenue has fallen because the imports have declined, and what are they going to do. They are going to raise the tariff wall still higher against imports; you are going to make it worse." The "buy in Canada" propa-ganda inaugurated by the Government and its friends was a thing calculated to add to the sorrows of the Government; it was a thing which could be carried too far; if a country was going to have trade it must have imports as well as exports; the first few days of war showed that clearly. If gentlemen opposite would state the truth as to what led to the deficit they would admit that it was not the war, but their own extravagant administration before the war. Before war was declared the revenue of the Government was declining, and if there had been no war the financial condition of the country would be just about what it is today with the war going on.

An analysis of the Government's figures showed that in the seven months just prior to the war there had been a decline in customs revenue of twenty million dollars, and of this decline not more than five million could be charged to the war. Provided for Deficits.

Mr. MacLean said that he had no criticism to offer for the Government having borrowed from the British Government to meet Canada's war opera-tions; if it had been found advisable for the Government to impose taxation for war operations, the opposition i Parliament and the people throughout the country would have justified them. and would have cheerfully assumed the burden; but the special taxation pro-posed by the minister of finance was not to raise revenue to meet expenditure upon the war, but to provide for the inordinate and excessive expenditures and deficits of this Government. "Of the tariff I have something to say. However much justification is sought, none can be found for the tariff increases proposed, or for the method and principles underlying them. I would be surprised if gentlemen opposite, or the people of the country will approve of the tariff taxation. If the finance minister had to raise revenue stands ready and united to do all in its through new customs taxation he has not done so in the best way; he has passing of all that has been asked and followed the line of least resistance; he has given a horizontal increase to the mposes but one condition and asks but general tariff of seven and a half per with the expenditure, that there shall be British preference, and he has prac-Protection or Revenue.
