"Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."—Eph. vi., 11.

THESE words are suggestive of conflict and of battle. When we witness any unusual activity in military circles, when we behold the mustering of troops, and hear the rattle of guns, and see the glitter of swords, and mounted officers hurrying to and fro, we naturally conclude that orders have arrived from headquarters, and a call to arms has been issued. We may not know the gravity of the situation, whether an enemy has really appeared, what
