Grandma's Story.

"Just one more story, grandma, about when you were a little girl and lived in the woods," said Frank.

And grandma drew off her spectacles and shut her book. She leaned her head back against the large easy chair and shut her eyes, thinking.

"I remember as if it were only yesterday," she said, raising her head and looking at the children who had gathered around her. "I was only 7 and my baby brother wasn't a year old."

"I'm going to the spring-house," said mother, "and you must stay in the room and rock the baby if he wakes." So I took my knitting—for I had learned to knit, and was very proud of the stocking which was growing under my hand.

"It was a cold day late in the fall and the doors were all shut. Baby slept, and I knitted for half an hour. As I got down from mother's great easy-chair, where I had been sitting, I thought I heard a strange noise outside. It wasn't Lion, for he had gone off with father to the mill. Something Baby Farming Extraordinary.

A Vienna telegram says:—At Warsaw a woman named Madam Skibitska, her married daughter, the latter's sister-in-law, and another woman, besides two men, have just been tried on the charge of having murdered some 200 infants. Some of the bodies of the deceased infants were exhumed and submitted to a post-mortem examination, the result of which was to show that they had died from starvation. The dead children were never interred singly in order not to arouse suspicion, but when half a dozen had succumbed they were put together in the coffin of an adult, and with the assistance of the coffin-maker and gravedigger, both of whom are amongst the accused, were buried as one person. The trial was ended on Saturday, and the chief culprit has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment, while her accomplices have been sentenced to prison for smaller terms. The public prosecutor has appealed against the sentence as being altogether inadequate.

In a quiet little hotel in Gerrard Street Soho, Aubertin, the man who, some four years ago, attempted to assassinate M. Jules Ferry, is at present engaged in writing the history of his life. So far the motive of the attempt upon the life of M. Ferry has been more or less a matter of conjecture, although Aubertin claims that he acted in the interests of Freemasonry in endeavouring to shoot the man who had betrayed the secrets of the brotherhood. He was convicted, but was pronounced insane, and was ordered to be confined in a lunatic asylum. Much of his book will be devoted to a description of the horrors of these institutions. He brings the gravest charges against his jailors, and has in his possession a phial containing poison, with which, he says, the asylum authorities attempted to kill him. Only a few days ago he made his escape, and found his way to England.

"Faith

is the foundation on which all knowledge rests. Without faith, knowledge is impossible. There is no science, however exact, which does not rest ultimately on the piers of faith. 'Proof implies that which is unproved, and, in the final analysis, that which cannot be proved. An argument which is based on no assumption is as useless, for all purposes of support, as a chain that is fixed to no staple. An endless chain of reasoning—that is, one that is all links with no fixed point anywhere—is an idle dream.' Destroy your faith, and you destroy your knowledge. Therefore our faiths are to be prized most highly and cherished most carefully, and are not to be given up until we find other and better faiths to take their place."
