

have pretty orderly discussion. I would give the floor first to an opposition member and then to a government member. And I think that when a mmeber starts in for instance on the servicing of loans that he should have the opportunity to exhaust that subject as far as he is concerned and we will not interrupt him. There will be a lot of questions, and if our inquiry can be kept in anything like an orderly fashion it would be much preferable.

Just before we adjourn, gentlemen, I have asked Mr. Mansur to make available to the committee some of the more important types of booklets and literature which they have so they can be distributed. Are they available?

The WITNESS: If they are wanted, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to have them for the next meeting.
