

ANNOUNCEMENT.

THE Canadian National Association has been established with the object of promoting the interests of Canada. In everything the members of the Society are, first of all, Canadian, pledged to the endeavour to uphold Canadian rights, and to uproot, without reference to creed, sectionalism or party, all sentiment foreign to distinctly Canadian interests. Its aim is loyalty to Canada and to one another; its contention that the emoluments and gifts of this country are the heritage of the sons of the country. To maintain the right of Canadians to all the privileges to which they are, by their birthright, entitled; and to oppose the pretensions of foreigners or those who maintain in this country national associations not in harmony with a wholesome Canadian spirit shall be an unswerving aim of the Association. If, for no other reason, this attitude would be forced upon it by the action of some of those who come here from European countries and form themselves into societies designated by the name of the countries from which they come, and who, by united action, secure to themselves the lion's share, placing Canadians in the position of aliens in their native land. The chief passport to place and to regard in this country, likewise, has, too often, been foreign birth and anti-Canadian
