REFERENDUM BILL DECISION IS POSTPONED UNTIL NEXT TUESDAY

MacBride, Labor Member, Scores Rowell and Union Government and Will Support Brackin Amendment—Raney Defends Immediate Taking of Vote in Ontario—Favors Sale of Native Wines.

TORONTO, April 22.—Protracted debate on the referendum motion occupied the attention of the Legislature again tonight and obliterated all possibility of a division on the measure before Tuesday next week. Further support for the resolution was forthcoming tonight, one Conservative member being among those who proclaimed their intention of voting for it.

Captain J. E. Thompson, Conservative member for Northeast Toronto, questioned the advisability of a referendum at a time when unrest was prevalent. He stated, however, that he would have been prepared to support a measure brought in by the Government.

Hon. Manning Doherty, minister of agriculture, declared that submission of a stated case to the courts might involve two years of litigation if the case were carried to the privy council. He upheld the introduction of the referendum motion by a private member.

J. R. Cooke of North Hastings was the first Conservative member to declare himself as a supporter of the referendum motion.

The speech of the evening was delivered by Hon. W. Raney. The attorney-general referred to the possibility of litigation over a stated case, delaying the issue until the summer of 1922. The Brackin amendment, calling for a stated case, he characterized as "too absurd to be worthy of consideration."

In the afternoon M. M. MacBride, Labor member for South Brant, began the debate.

"I am the last man who wants to embarrass the Government in any form," declared Mr. MacBride. "The province must have a government and the United Farmers of Ontario are entitled to a fair chance to give it a good government. The duty of the Government is to get together and give us a fair government measure which we can all get behind."

The speaker had a word of commendation for the press.

"They have been very tolerant and considerate, and their words of condemnation have been very few, in view of the gravity of the situation that he said, was "double-barreled," with the McCreey resolution and the Sandy bill. That double-barreled policy would have the biggest back kick that ever a gun had.

"If you go to the people with a gold brick resolution, then you have betrayed the trust placed in you," he continued. "We must be absolutely sure of the legality of the referendum. Our bounden duty is to settle that legal point beyond the shadow of a doubt. This province does not wish bone legislation, but not to fool them. The people of this province do not want backbone legislation. Therefore I support the Brackin amendment."

Full Responsibility.

"Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House," Mr. Raney persisted. "If the amendment moved by the member for West Ottawa means anything it means that the Government and the Legislature should assume full responsibility for the prohibition of the importation of liquor. Why does not the honorable member inform us what legislation the Ontario temperance act did not do? The Ontario temperance act was passed by the late government, to make prohibition effective in this province."

Mr. Raney quoted both Sir James Whitney and Hon. W. J. Hanna to the effect that it was not within the jurisdiction of the province to restrict the importation of liquor.

The temperance question," the speaker continued, "had been out of party politics in Ontario since 1915. He gave Hon. Newton Wesley Rowell equal credit with Sir William Hearst for the enactment of the Ontario temperance act, a statement which elicited far louder applause from the Government benches than it did from the Liberals.

Trend of Events.

"Not only was it proper," Mr. Raney averred, "that this referendum measure should be introduced by a private member, it would, in my opinion, have been against the trend of events for the past four years if the Government had taken it upon itself to make it a partisan measure. There are two things the Ontario temperance act did not do: it did not cover importation or manufacture of liquor, and the general assumption at the time the act was passed was that these matters were of Dominion jurisdiction. It is only within the past three or four months that anything to the contrary has been suggested and that it has been proposed that the province should skate on such thin ice and run the risk of losing all that has been gained up to now."

Mr. Raney believed, would be hardly justified so soon after the people had pronounced on the Ontario temperance act, which embodied the exception to native wines sale. Any alteration affecting the matter of enforcement, the speaker said, would be quite readily made, but great caution would be used in making changes affecting funda-mentals of the O. T. A. If bill 26 was adopted by the people conditions would return to those of prior to January 1. He wanted a purchasing board.

Sir George Foster moved the resolution to appoint a purchasing board for the purchase of departmental and other government supplies. Sir George sketched the history of the war purchasing commission, appointed in 1915, the commission functioned for three years under the chairmanship of Sir Edward Kemp. In 1918 the powers of the commission were extended by order-in-council to cover purchases other than exclusively war materials.

Replying to Mr. MacKenzie King, Sir George said that the new board would not purchase supplies needed for the operation of the Canadian Government railways and of the government merchant marine.

On this ground, Mr. Fielding criticized the proposal. The government, he said, was adopting a principle for which there was a good deal to be said, but as regards 75 per cent of its purchases, the government did not propose to apply that principle.

John Best (Dufferin), and A. B. McColl (Kent), both opposed the appointment of a commission, maintaining that the government should not seek to shelve its responsibility.

Mr. McColl thought this was a good opportunity for the government to economize.

Dr. Blake (North Winnipeg), supported the appointment, declaring his personal investigation had disclosed that the war purchasing commission had made sane and economical provision for supplies, and in disposing of surplus stocks had saved the country millions of dollars.

Mr. Lucien Cannon asked him what about the sale of cavalry saddles in the west. Some of these saddles, said Dr. Blake, had been in stock twenty years, a sufficient commentary on previous extravagance and of the difficulties inherited by the commission.

In answer to numerous questions, Sir George Foster said the commission would be headed by a member of the government, would purchase supplies only on requisition from the various departments, and the departments would be responsible for quality and good measure.

Every dollar expended would still come under the review of the auditor general, and be subject to the criticism of parliament as at present.

Commission of Experts.

The commission would consist of experts, who would purchase in bulk, thereby getting the best prices. Their appointment would do away with competition between various government departments, and relieve the cabinet ministers of work to which they were frequently unable properly to attend. There was no intention to form a new commission, with fat jobs for friends and the question of gratuities to widows and dependents.

Major R. W. Coulthard, Toronto; Dr. A. B. Leckie, and W. S. Doherty, Ottawa, officials of the D. S. C. R. I., gave evidence in regard to the treatment of amputation cases and the men out with artificial limbs. They defended the Canadian system of standardizing the artificial appliances issued, and said officials in other countries had expressed admiration of Canada's system.

Sir George Foster, moving that the committee report progress, said he was convinced of the usefulness of the proposed commission, and intended to put the resolution through at no distant date. If members on both sides would take the trouble to investigate the work of the war purchasing commission they would accept the proposed commission as the logical way of dealing with the purchase of supplies.

Sir George said the government would consider a proposal to appoint a special committee of the House to inquire into the necessity for the commission.

SAYS TUBERCULAR SOLDIERS IN NEED OF SPECIAL PENSIONS

Col. Elliott Tells Committee of Difficulties Met.

OTTAWA, April 22.—(By Canadian Press.)—Good progress in dealing with tubercular and amputation cases was made today by the special committee on pensions. As a result of evidence along these lines today, it is felt that comparatively little time will be further spent on these classes of cases. The chief witness of the day was Lieut.-Col. J. H. Elliott of Spadina Road Sanatorium of Toronto, who told the committee of difficulties tubercular patients have to contend with in seeking to re-establish themselves.

Col. Elliott held that owing to their need for sanitary housing, good food and warm clothing these men were entitled to special consideration in the way of pensions. They should have full disability pension as long as such was needed.

John Anderson of Hamilton, representing the veterans of France, cited cases of hardship among widowed mothers whose pensions had been reduced, and urged the necessity of an increase to this class particularly. He also urged the committee to consider
