THE DAY'S EVENTS REVIEWED

RTILLERY DUELS and sharp local encounters marked A proceedings on the British battlefront yesterday, after the Australians had expelled the last German soldiers from Pozieres and had extended their gains beyond this important village. The military value of Pozieres, which is one of those positions conferring great advantage on its possessors, lies in the fact that it crowns the highest point in the Albert ridge and it affords an observation bers, took place in the house of compost that will enable the British to train their guns on the communications behind the German lines and to correct their fire. It is, therefore, not surprising that the Germans devoted great attention to the defence of this village. David Lloyd George, British secretary of state for war, cites a German divisional order, issued at Contalmaison on July 11. That order said that the conversion of villages into strong points was of the greatest importance. Such villages Ireland and, therefore, was father of were Pozieres, Contalmaison, the two Bazentins and Longueval. Since that order was issued all those villages have been torn from the Germans.

It was by sheer accident and not by design of the Germans that the war ever became one of trenches, for such a turn given to it served to prolong the issue, and such extension of decision obviously worked to the disadvantage of the enemy by giving the allies time to develop their resources. It happened that the Germans had provided themselves with a great number of heavy guns for an altogether different purpose, and that these siege guns came in handy for trench fighting. Talk about the allies learning anything from the Germans in the matter of armament is incorrect. The British navy was arm-

The British secretary of war, David Four Thousand Prisoners Fall Lloyd George, in a published statement tonight, shows the importance the Germans attached to the retention of Pozieres by quoting from a German divisional order, issued in Contalmaison on July 11, as follows:

Greatest Obstacles Overcome. The opinion of the military critics in London is that no positions so strong as the British are now successfully attacking will be found between Pozieres and Bapaume; otherwise they argue, the Germans would not have risked bringing troops and guns from the Verdun sector to defend Pozieres, and it is inferred from indications in the official despatches that the British are already beginning to establish themselves on both sides of the road from Pozieres to Bapaume.

In fact there is so much nickel ore in Sudbury that the greatest mineral experts known to science, have declared that there is more wealth in the nickel ore bodies at Sudbury in Ontario than in any other area in the mineral world! Eut The World has not only been exposing the actions of the International, but it has been exposing politicians and prominent citizens of Canada, who have been connected with it. In fact the uncovering of the Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, who has been its chief representative in this country, and of the armament trust as represented by the Ross Rifle Co. and the German motal trust traveling under the guise of the International Nickel Co. of the United States, the Standard Oil Co. and a whole raft of power companies and other foreign concerns more or less entrenched under special privileges of one kind or another in Canadathe uncovering of this sedulous and active worker in our midst has aroused the people in Canada as no other revelation ever has aroused them.
