Demand for cash wheat was strong, considerable buying being reported for domestic and export. American millers were in the market, and were credited with buying fair amounts. The offerings were of a light nature, and premiums advanced one cent, making it three cents over the future price.

The coarse grain future market held steady up to the last hour, when it weakened somewhat. A considerable volume of business was transacted during the day.

General selling started wheat prices down grade right from the outset, with the bears making the most out of unfavorable aspects of the business situation. Besides, word that Belgian government were out of the export market counted a good deal as a special depressing factor. Later there were indications of export business with Italy, but the rallies which ensued did not develop much force. It was not known until after the market counted a good that the purchasing for Italy was on a large scale, totaling, according to some estimates, 3,000, 300 bushels, practically all United States grown. Receipts continued light and country offerings small.
