The Widow's Son
By Mrs. E. Southworth

As soon as they landed, Mr. Powis leaving all their effects at the custom house, called a cab put his wife and daughter into it, and gave the order: "To the Queen's Hotel."

"You see the great English sea port for the first time, by gaslight my dear," said Mrs. Powis to Lily May. "but to-morrow you will see it from the most favorable point of view, by daylight."

CHAPTER XXXV.
REUNION.

The next morning, in a private parlor of the Queen's Hotel, a pleasant party of three sat down to nice breakfast. It consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Powis and Lily May. They had slept well, had risen refreshed, and were in excellent spirits.

Even Lily May was elated with the idea that she had got to the end of her voyage so that the next move would be to turn around and go back again.

At another time under other circumstances she would have desired to see all that was worth looking at in Liverpool, and then run up to London to see the Tower of Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, and perhaps extend her tour into Scotland and the Highlands, and Heaven knows where else.

But now she was only anxious to embark on the first steamer and go back to America. She was hungry, thirsty, faint and sick for home and friends.

"Papa, dear," she said, as she divided her attention between the breakfast table and the bay window which looked down upon the busy street with its gay shops and strange folk—papa, dear, have you inquired when the next steamer leaves for New York?"

"You spoiled, impatient little woman I know with out inquiring, the sailing days of the ocean steamers from this port are fixed. This is Saturday morning and one sailed quite crowded. We could not have got passage in her even if we had got in yesterday morning, instead of last night. The next steamer sails on Wednesday."

"Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday—four days to wait, papa Oh, dear."

"They will give you an opportunity for seeing London."

"Oh, indeed, I don't want to see London, papa—at least not this time, I want to go back. And besides if we were to go to London, we might not get back in time. We might miss the steamer. Oh, no, dear papa, please let me stay here, where I can watch the ocean (it is the road home, you know—) until we embark upon it," pleaded Lily May.

"And by the way Arthur, would it not be best if you should see at once whether we can get passage in the next steamer? They are very crowded at this season, and staterooms are apt to be taken long in advance," said Mrs. Powis.

"Yes, I will do so at once. And Lily May, my pet when we have once secured our passage we may safely run up to London and spend two whole days there," said Mr. Powis.

And as he had now finished breakfast he left the table and went to make the necessary inquiries in person. Mrs. Powis and Lily May withdrew their chairs from the table and went and sat within the bay window to look down upon the unfamiliar street with its passing throngs of strange faces.

Mr. Powis went down to the office and to the clerk's desk around which was the usual ever-changing little group of busy men and idlers. Some one was asking questions of the clerk, and so Mr. Powis waited his turn.

"Who was it you wanted?" inquired the clerk of the questioner.

"Sir William Wynne Llewellyn, sir, of Rhys-Rhydis, of Cardigan shire, Wales," answered the man touching his hat.

Arthur Powis, with a start turned to look at the stranger, who had named the very young baronet that was the next heir, falling Lily May, to the American Llewellyn estate.

The questioner was a respectable-looking, middle-aged person in a footman's livery.

"Sir William Wynne Llewellyn is here," answered the clerk.

"Then will you please send this note up to him, sir?"

It does not require an answer," said the footman, laying an unmistakable billet-doux upon the desk, and touching his hat as he retired.

"Did I understand you to say that Sir William Wynne Llewellyn is at present in the house?" inquired Arthur Powis.

"Yes, sir," the baronet always stops here when he comes to this city," was the reply.

Arthur Powis drew two cards from his pocket, wrote a few words in addition to his name, put the cards in a small envelope, directed it, and handed it to the clerk, saying: "When you send this note just left with you, oblige me by sending these cards also."

"Certainly," said the clerk, and he called a waiter and put both missives into his hand, telling him to take them to their creation.

Arthur then inquired whether all the staterooms were taken in the Russia, that was to sail on Wednesday. The clerk took down a duplicate diagram of the steamer that hung in the office, and examined it.

"There is a single stateroom in the ladies' cabin, as a single berth in the gentleman's saloon. That would not be accommodation enough for your party perhaps, sir?" inquired the clerk.

"Yes, since nothing better is to be had, I engage them at once," said Mr. Powis. "The ladies can have the stateroom together, and I must have the single berth," he mused as he turned from the desk.

At that moment the waiter who had carried up his cards returned.

"Sir William is not in his apartment, sir, but I left your cards and the note with his servant," said the waiter.

"Quite right, thank you," returned Mr. Powis. And then he went

Could Not Sleep

Mr. Earnest Clark, Police Officer, 338 King St., Kingston, Ont., writes:

"For three years I suffered from nervousness and sleeplessness. I believe my condition was brought about by overwork. I had frequent headaches, neuralgic pains and twitching of nerves and muscles. I had indigestion, was short of breath and easily tired. I commenced a treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and seven boxes of this medicine cured me of all my symptoms. I am now feeling one hundred per cent. better than I was, and have to thank Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for the good health I am now enjoying."

upstairs to rejoin his wife and daughter. The parlor had been cleared of the breakfast service and laid straight and Lily May was sitting beside her mother at the open window, looking down upon the sidewalk and clapping her hands with delight at the exhibition of Punch and Judy—a street entertainment of the most ridiculous description with which, nevertheless, the gravest people are entertained.

Lily May stopped her lively demonstration, to turn and inquire anxiously of her father: "Well, papa, dear?"

"Well, I have secured passage for us, in the Russia, to the refusal of the first cabin. You and your mother will have a stateroom forward, where,
