TABLE FACTORY BURNED.

Sixty-thousand-dollar Fire at Owen Sound

Owen Sound Dec. 25.-The Na tional Table Factory was almost totally destroyed by fire yesterday, and the loss is estimated as high as $60,000. The origin of the fire is a mystery. At-2 p.m. smoke was noticed issuing from the tops of the windows in the third story of the building at the southeast corner. The brigade responded promptly, but before the water was turned on flames were belching from several of the upper story windows. The automatic sprinklers worked well, and kept the fire out of the north end of the factory for more than an hour. Finally, however, the fire worked through the entire building. The McQuay tannery, adjoining, had a close call from destruction, and when the south end wall of the table factory fell a wall of fire shot across the fifty feet of space intervening. It looked as though the big tannery must go also. The firemen devoted all their efforts to this new danger and saved the tannery. For an hour, a hard but successful fight was made to save the sawmill, engine room, drying building and lumber piles. The main factory, however, is almost a total loss, and fifty men are thrown out of employment. It is owned by the National Table Company, Limited, and the loss is insured in the New England Muthal. A member of the company stated that the factory would be rebuilt as soon as the material could be got on the ground and the weather would permit. The factory was 210 x 60, three stories high, of brick and stone. were belching from several of the Thought Sixty Frenchmen Worth More Than a Bronze Cup.

New York, Dec. 26 .- Chief Office Hochfeldt, who sails the seas apoard the gallant tank steamship Pho: bus, does not like the French people, individually or collectively He says the French Governmen sets a low value on its citizens but he thinks the value is high enough but he thinks the value is high enough for all practical purposes.

Last spring Mate Hochfeldt was bound for this port on his tank boat, when a wreck was sighted. Hochfeldt commanded a lileboat which rescued sixty Frenchmen from the bark Isle de Terre Neuve. The men were brought to this port. Just before the Phoebus sailed from Hamburg on her recent trip to this port Captain Schierhorst received from the French Government a bronze cup and Mate Government a bronze cup and Mate Hochfeldi received a silver medal of the second class in recognition of their heroism in saving the sixty French fishermen.

The two officers were angry. They had not reasonable entertained a been designed.

The two officers were angry. They had not previously entertained a high idea of the value of Frenchmen, but they certainly thought that sixty of them should be worth more than a bronze cup and a silver medal of the second class.

So Captain Schierhorst and Mate Hochfeldt refused to accept the gifts of the French Government.

"The bronze cup was a cheap affair," said Mate Hochfeldt, "and no one would blame the captain for refusing to accept it." Why, even the most worthless Frenchman that ever shrugged his shoulders was worth more than the bronze cup. And the silver medal of the second class! What, use have 1 for it? Silver medals butter no parsnips. They do not even pepper sauerkraut."

THE DREYFUS CASE.

Speculation as to Decision for New Trial

London, Dec. 26.-The Times has the following from its correspondent at Paris :- It will probably be a few weeks before the Court of Cassation takes up the Dreyfus case. Should it decide to send the case to a new courtmartial another few weeks will elanse before the military tribunal assembles, so that the final issue of the case is not yet at hand. There is every prospect that the judicial proceedings will be carried on without the slightwill be carried on without the slightest vestige of popular excitement, as no political apital can now be made out of the Dreylis affair. All that remains in question is the regular administration of justice, and should the court so decide there will be a redress of a judicial error. Absolute secrecy is maintained by the members of the commission as to what led them to favor revision. Among the rumors are statements that the forged dates of certain documents and the alteration of others which were submitted in the secret dossier to the Rennes court were detected at the War Office, and that this contributed in a great measure to the decision of the commission.

side world knows so little—Lhassa, the mysterious. Solitary and aloof it has dwelt in the heart of the Himalayas for twelve centuries, and from its mountain heights has sent forth the sacred lay to millions of the faithful, for the Grand Liama is the Pope of the Buddhist world. His temporal authority is almost equal to that of a king, although Thibet has always been ranked as a Chinese province, and thrice a year the Lama has sent a tribute to Pekin. Outside of this perfunctory observance of an of this perfunctory observance of an ancient custom, Thibet has been unmindful of politics and international affairs. The people of the country have tilled their arid soil and tended their herds of sheep and yaks, while the Grand Llama and the lesser church dignitaries have been wrapped in the contemplation of their ancient religion. But this isolation must religion. But this isolation must-end, soon or late, for Thiet has be-come a pawn in the great game which Britain and Russia are playing. The Bear is seeking an outlet to the couth and the Lion keeps moving Bear is seeking an outlet to the south, and the Lion keeps moving north. Thibet lies between. Its fate is inevitable. It must choose its masis inevitable. It must choose its mas-ter. No longer will it be permitted to remain neutral. The Llama realizes this fact, and making a virtue out of a necessity, he despatched a mission to St. Petersburg some months ago, and, it is rumored, came to an un-derstanding with the Czar. He was wise enough not to waste time by applying to Pekin for advice or assistance. This move forced the hand of Britain, and Col. Younghusband's mission was the result. The protext for the British expedition is the refusal of the Llama to make a commercial treaty with the Indian Government. Distrust of Russia is the

Thibetans and Their Customs

Except from a strategic point of view Great Britain or Russia can gain little by occupying Thibet. The country is poor, the inhabitants, except to themselves, are unimportant. But The Novoe Vremya says: "Whoever becomes master in the residence of the Dalai Llama will undoubtedly analyy great prestive and influence. enjoy great prestige and influence throughout the Puddhist world." Prestige of this sort is not important Prestige of this sort is not important to either of the great powers, but it is difficult to see how the Russian newspaper arrives at its conclusion. One rather inclines to the belief that the Buddhists would regard the captors of their holy city with much the same feelings as the Crusaders entertained for the Moslems during the Crusade. The opinions of the Buddhists are not working either Busies. tained for the Moslems during the Crusade. The opinions of the Buddhists are not worrying either Russia or Britain. Both nations have the habit of depending on themselves, and each, for the sake of forestalling the other, would probably be willing to be voted the most unpopular race in Asia. Although, according to our enlightened eyes, the Thibetans appoor misguided heathens, their impending fate is something they have hardly deserved. Many conflicting reports have been circulated about them, but the best authorities agree that they are neither bloodthirsty nor predatory. On the contrary, they have frequently shown the greatest kindness to adventurous Europeans who have penetrated their country. True, some of their customs do not commend themselves to the refined tastes of Christian people. For instance, they mix butter in their tea and eat with chopsticks. They also practice polyandry, woman being far outnumbered by the men. This fact may account for the great number of religious instructors in the country who take the vows of celibacy. Apart from these peculiarities, which only go to prove that they are old-fashioned, the Thibetans are a decent people, as Asiatic races go. It is not their fault that they occupy ground, which, if atic races go. It is not their fault that they occupy ground, which, if Russia held it, would be dangerous to India, and which, if dominated by Britain, would be exasperating to the Czar. It is their misfortune. Having declined to receive our missionaries, they must prepare to entertain our troops.

One Englishman Enters Lhassa.

Since the famous Palace of Lhassa was erected in the seventh century, hundreds of Caucasian explorers have attempted to visit the sacred city and register at the best hotel they and register at the best hotel they could find. Some famous explorers have undertaken the exploit, and among them might be named Prince Henry of Orleans, Bonva'at, Frievalski, Capt. Bower, Savage Landor, Rockhill, Capt. Wellby, Dutreuil de Rhin, Gerard, Littledale, Sven Hedrin, Bogle, Maxwell, and Sherlock Holmes. Only two of the number ever cretered the forbidden city—Maxwell and Holmes. We have only Sir A. C. Doyle's assurance that Mr. Holmes really did reach Lhassa, but since the gentleman has done more since the gentleman has done more remarkable things there is no reason since the gentleman has done more remarkable things there is no reason why we should attempt to discredit in the same the children and then hanged himself. Phillips had complained lately of his poverty, and it is believed his mind became unsettled. With axe in hand, Phillips entered his house Christmas Eve, and crushed the skulls of his children Todo, aged fitteen; Frank, aged eleven, and Carrie, aged ten. Mrs. Phillips died last summer.

The man who does the most notable things usually has the least to say about them.

He also acquired many facts about Thibet which were then for the first time given to the world. given to the world.

Perils of the Road

given to the world.

Perils of the Road.

Traveling in Thibet has always been, and must always te, difficult in the extreme. An armed expedition such as Britain purposes sending forth would find providing for its transport the most difficult problem. Mules and ponies are plentiful, but in those altitudes fodder is scarce. At this season of the year the trip would be even more hazardous than usual. A military force would be able to resist the bands of robbers which infest the great roads, so that this danger, very imminent indeed to smaller parties, need not be reckoned on. The Thibetans, however, would probably resist, and as they have lately supplied themselves with magazine rifies they could do terrible execution in a country which can furnish three ambuscades for every mile of road. Until a couple of years ago the Thibetans were armed with old flintlocks and spears, but they learned from China what China had learned of Japan, and are now much better equipped to give battle than formerly. Should the expedition reach Lhassa (and that it will do so if Lhassa becomes its objective cannot be doubted), the probability is that Lhassa (and that it will do so if Lhassa becomes its objective cannot be doubted), the probability is that a fierce fight will ensue. From what little is known of the city, it seems certain that it is a veritable fortress, set on a high hill. Never has it been put to the test of war, howev-er, so that its actual strength is a matter of mere conjecture. The guns of the British are going to ask it a question.
