ANGER.

THERE is an inconfiftency in Anger, very common in life; which is, That those who are vexed to impatience, are angry to see others less diffurbed than themselves; but when others begin to rave, they immediately see in them, what they could not find in themselves; the deformity and folly of usiles rage.

TO be angry about triffes, is mean and childifh; to rage and be furious is brutifh; and to maintain perpetual wrath is a kin to the practice and temper of devils; but to prevent or fupprefs rifing refentment, is wife and glorious, is manly and divine.

BEAU.

A BEAU is every thing of a woman but the fex, and nothing of a man befide it.

BENEVOLENCE.

THERE cannot be a more glorious object in creation, than a human being, replete with benevolence, meditating in what manner he might render himfelf most acceptable to his Creator, by doing most good to his creatures.

CHARACTER.

WE fhould not be too hafly in beflowing either our praise or cenfure on mankind, fince we shall often find fuch a mixture of good and evil in the same charafter, that it may require a very accurate judgment, and a very elaberate enquiry, to determine on which fide the balance turns.

DEPENDANCE.

AMONG the many who have enforced the duty of giving, I am furprifed there are none to inculcate the ignominy of receiving; to fhew, that by every favour we accept, we in fome measure forfeit our native freedom, and that a flate of continual Dependance on the generofity of others is a life of gradual debafement.

Whenever there is wealth, there will be Dependance, and expectation; and wherever there is Dependance, there will be an emulation of fervility.

DESIRE.

THE Defires of man increase with his acquifitions—every ftep, which he advances, brings fomething within his view, which he did not fee before, and which, as foon as he fees it, he begins to want. Where neceffity ends, curiofity begins; and no fooner are we fupplied with every thing that nature can demand, than we fet down to contrive artificial appetites.

DETRACTION.

DETRACTION is among those vices which the most languid virtue has sufficient force to prevent; because by Detraction, that is not gained which is taken away. "He who fiches from me may
