"Strangers! I should think not," he echoed. "We mayn't know much about each other's tastes, but we do know something about each other's souls, which is more than can be said of most men and women who have been acquainted for half a lifetime. As for our souls, you haven't had one, and I—well, if I swear to you that I've never murdered anybody, or been in prison, or committed an unforgivable crime, will you take my word for it?"

"If you told me you were a murderer or had committed some unforgivable crime, I—I don't feel as if I could believe it," Annesley assured him. "It—would hurt me very much to think evil of you. I'm sure I feel you are evil, but those horrible men."

"You're an angel to feel like that and speak like that!" exclaimed Smith. "I don't deserve your good opinion. I thank you, but I won't, because you're alone with me, and under my protection. To do me good and save me from trouble you've risked danger for yourself and put yourself in some—most men are, or would be, in women's eyes if women saw them as they are; but I'm not bad enough to be a brute to you. The worst I've ever done is to try to pay back a great injury, an eye for an eye, a mouth for a tooth. Do you blame me for that?"

"I have no right—I don't know what the injury was," said the girl; and then, hesitating a little, "But I don't think I could find much happiness in revenge."

"I could, or anyhow, satisfaction. I confess that to you. About 'happiness,' I don't know much. But you could teach me."

"Yes. Do you believe there can be such a thing as love at first sight?"

"I can't tell. Books say so. Perhaps."

"There's no 'perhaps.' I've found that out for myself to-night. It's you who taught me. I believe love that comes at sight must be the only real love—a sort of electric call from soul to soul. The thing I've met the one woman in the world—my helpmate. If I come out of this trouble all right, and can ask a girl like you to give herself to me, will you do it?"

"Oh, you say you ought to be grateful!"

"But I don't want gratitude. I don't deserve it. This is the first time I've ever really lived. I owe that to you. And it's more than you can owe to me."

The man laughed, a happy-sounding laugh, as though danger were miles away instead of on his heels. "You know almost as much about men as a child knows, Miss Grayle," he said. "If you think I'm one of the sort—if there is such a sort—who would time himself to a woman for gratitude's sake. I've just one motive in wanting you to marry me. I love you and need you. I couldn't feel more than I do now."

The wonder of it swept over Annesley in a flood. Even in her worst dreams—and she had had wild dreams sometimes—she had never pictured a man such as this loving her and wanting her. To the girl's mind he was so handsome, so attractive, that it seemed impossible his choice of her could be genuine and from the heart. She would wake up to a stale, flat-to-morrow and find that none of these astonishing things had really happened.

Still, she might as well give herself up to the dream while it lasted. "It's a fairy story?" surely!" she said, trying to laugh. "There are so many beautiful girls in the world for a man like you that—"

"A man like me! What am I like?"

"Oh, it's hard to put into words, when you ask me a sudden question. But—well, you're very brave; I'm sure of that."

"I hope I'm not a coward. All normal men are brave. That's nothing. What else am I—to you?"

"Interesting. More interesting than—than any one I ever saw."

"If you feel that, you don't want to send me out of your life do you?"

"After you've stood by me and sheltered me from danger?"

"No-o. I don't want to send you out of my life, of course. But—"

"There's only one way in which you can keep me and I can keep you—circumstances as we are. We must be husband and wife."

"Oh!" The girl covered her burning face with both hands. The world was on fire around her.

"I frighten you. And yet you might have consented to marry that other man who called himself Smith. You want to meet him, to decide whether he was possible or impossible."

"I know. I did go to meet him for that. But I see now, if he'd kept his appointment, it would have ended in nothing, even if—if he had been pleased with me. I couldn't have brought myself to say 'yes' to him."

"How can you be certain?"

"Because," Annesley spoke almost in a whisper—"because he wasn't you."

Smith snatched her clasped hands and kissed them passionately. The warm touch of the man's lips gave the girl a new and mysterious sensation. No man had ever before kissed even her hands. Suddenly she felt sure that what she felt for him must be love—that love at first sight, which, according to him, was an electric call from soul to soul. He told her that they belonged to each other now, for good or evil.

"Darling!" he said. "You are mine, for I shan't let you go. For love of you I'll free myself. I ask you to be my wife you'll say to me what you wouldn't have said to the other Smith?"

"If I can escape, to hear you. But I don't know what Mrs. Ellisworth is."

"St. George rescued the princess from the dragon; so will I, though I've told you I'm no saint. When we meet again I'll tell you what I am, and my real name, which is better than Smith, though it mayn't be as safe. Now, there are other things to say."

But there was no time to say them, for the taxi abruptly stopped. The taxi seemed so short since they had fled away from the Savoy, that Annesley couldn't believe they were already in Torrington Square. Perhaps the chauffeur had made a mistake! She looked out, hoping that it might be so; but there before her were the darkened windows of the dull, familiar house, 22A. The great moment was upon them.

Harrison (Ont.) Father Says Dr. Cassell's Tablets Saved His Child's Life

Mr. Corby, Harrison P.O., Ont., writes: "Our little girl was weak from birth, and though we tried doctor's medicine and other things she got no better. She just lay in her cot and cried, and neighbors all said we could not save her. The doctors said she had stomach trouble, and that her chances were small, yet Dr. Cassell's Tablets cured her. They have been worth their weight in gold to us, for we were just giving up hope of saving our little daughter. I don't think there is any other medicine for children like Dr. Cassell's Tablets. Publish this letter if you like; it may help others as the 'tablets' helped us."

SIDELIGHTS ON THE STAGE AND SCREEN

THE GRAND
A fair sized audience witnessed the performance of "The Little Cafe" at the Grand on Saturday evening, receiving the offering with the appreciation it deserved. "The Little Cafe" is a musical comedy of much the usual order, though with a novel and interesting plot, and contains several good musical and dancing numbers. The chorus was costumed and the scenery exceptionally elaborate.

TELLEGEN AS DIRECTOR
Lou Tellegen, internationally celebrated stage and screen star who has appeared recently in numerous productions, will hereafter change his relations with the camera and forsake the screen to become a director. The announcement comes from Jesse L. Lasky that the action was taken at the suggestion of Mr. Tellegen who has long desired to take up directing on this side of the water.

Though the distinguished actor is chiefly known in America both on the screen and on the stage simply as an actor, he was a matter of fact one of the first directors of successful photoplays on a large scale in Europe. It was Mr. Tellegen who directed Sarah Bernhardt when the great French tragedienne made her debut on the screen in the Famous Players Film Company's adaptation of "Queen Elizabeth" in 1912. This picture was the first production released by the Famous Players, and it is noteworthy that the director of the production received especial comment at the time of its release. Lou Tellegen later came to this country with Mme. Bernhardt as a member of her company and it was rather as an actor than as a director that he became popular here. During the time that he has been connected with the Lasky Company as a star, Mr. Tellegen has appeared on the Paramount program in "The Explorer," "The Unknown," "The Victory Cross," and "The Black Wolf."

A few weeks ago he transferred his activities from Hollywood to New York where he has been hard at work at the Famous Players studio on "The Long Trail" in which he will appear with Mary Fuller. This is to be Mr. Tellegen's last appearance on the screen, and he returns to the management of Jesse L. Lasky in taking up his new duties and he will depart in a week or two for the Lasky studio in Hollywood where he will be directly associated with Cecil B. DeMille.

KEYSTONE PIES
The card handed to Mack Sennett bore the name of the son of the secretary of the mayor of Los Angeles. He gained access to the big boss.

"What I want to get if I can, M. Sennett, are three or four of your Keystone pies for a comedy. The Vitaphone company is making 'We don't know how to make these pies you use in your comedies and I thought you might let us have some.'"

Mr. Sennett gravely informed the young man that now-a-days Keystone are eating their pies instead of throwing them at each other.

"BORIS HAMBURG"
Boris Hamburg plays on the violinette made by the great Cremonese maker Domenico Montagnana, called "The Mighty Venetian," by Charles Roedel, the famous violinist. The cello in question is dated 1732, is a perfect specimen of the master's art, and is valued at ten thousand dollars. The instrument originally belonged to the collection of Baron Giuseppe, of the little town of Borgo, near Trenta, Italy, in whose family it had been for several generations. Mr. Hamburg made a special trip to Italy to see the cello which he eventually secured after much difficulty, as the Baron was loath to part with his treasure at any price. Boris Hamburg will be heard at the Grand Opera House Thursday, March 22nd.

MILLION DOLLAR DOLL
"The Million Dollar Doll," which will be the offering at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday, March 20th, has two of the greatest comedy characters on the stage to-day. Melvin Meekman, a henpecked husband, and Jasper Jackson, a colored servant, are left at home to look after the household when the others depart for the San Francisco Exposition. However, Melvin and Jasper are not to be outdone, so they disguise themselves and show on the same boat. Melvin as a common sailor and Jasper as a potato peeler. One can hardly imagine how much trouble these fellows can get into on the voyage, and after they arrive at the exposition they have a hard time getting even one meal a day, and are about to give up in despair, when Melvin draws the grand prize in the Argentine Lottery and becomes immensely rich. These characters are presented by Harvey and Harold Orr, both recognized stars in their line of work. This is the original company that played the Park Theatre, New York, for 3 months, and the same at Broadway Beauty. Chorus of 25 handsome girls. One of the big features is the illuminated runway over the heads of the audience.

Return Visit of Hamilton PrintersEnjoyable "Get Together"
Day Spent Here on Saturday

The return visit of the Hamilton printers to Brantford in following on the get-together principle adopted some time ago, took place on Saturday afternoon, when some seven disciples of Benjamin Franklin journeyed from the Ambitious City hitherward, enjoying a sojourn during the afternoon and evening. That the printers of Brantford lack in bowling that prowess which they have deservedly achieved in hockey was evidenced at the Brant bowling alley, whither the visitors were conducted, and where they proceeded with very little effort to annex four of the six games played. Following the massacre, an adjournment was made to the Pekin cafe, where supper was served the party, which afterward repaired to the A. O. F. hall. Here, sides were quickly chosen, and an exciting game of carpeball played, resulting in a win for the Telephone City printers. Cards and other games, music and short speeches by several of the Hamilton printers, including Mr. Atkinson, instructor in the Technical School in Hamilton, were given, expressive of their pleasure of the good time afforded them by the printers of Brantford. The gathering broke up at an early hour in order to let the visitors catch the last radial car home.
