CHAPTER VII. A BATTLE OF WORDS.

go. Mr. Armstrong, however, showed no disposition to leave.

'You two fellows,' said Frederick: owe me eternal gratitude for making you known to each other. You run capitally together. But it's rather good, Mr. Armstrong, to hear you speak in that way of money-you millionaire!' who have the advantage over us poor the smartest men in the world for gling genius---' making money.'

'I understand you. It is the fashion to say of my countrymen that they are smart—that is, that they will do any mean thing to make ly, Trail once more made his appearance, but do it in such a way that ance at the door. Frederick Chappices, for Cash.

W. H. KNOWLES, the law can't get hold of them .- pell went hastily to his side. That is your interpretation of the word 'smart,' as it is applied to us. Is is the fashion to say of Americans, They're cute, they are!' 'They're that is—such as might make a man feel as mean as a peacock in a thunder-shower.

The description of the manufactures our Province.—The Government New Brunswick are fast awakening

Both of the young men laughed at the extravagant absurdity of the notion, and Frederick said that, as the Americans were strong on patents, Mr. Armstrong ought to take out a patent for his new scheme of the planets and constellations. In the midst of their laughter, Trail appeared at the door and announced a new visitor.

'Mr. Fangle, sir.' Mr. Fangle, upon entering, looked fussily around. He was a short, whose joints seemed to be set upon were just advising Mr. Armstrong to take out a patent.' and then the young gentleman glanced again at Styles, in Black, Navy Blue, Brown, Drai the clock, and rose nervously. His LUITATION FELT HATS, great anxiety was now to get rid of his visitors. 'Patent1' cried Mr. Fangle, who was a humble hanger-on to the skirts LADIES PROMENADE SCARFS, of the rich, into whose society he had by some means wormed himself. ' Patent for what?'

Mr. Armstrong answered him. 'For always coming in at the nick of time-for making every speculation a successful one-for causing the fruits to grow in the jam-pots ready for the market-for drawing people together at the exact moment they want to see one another-for bringing future generations into the , world upon a new principle-

'Goodness gracious!' cried Mr. Fangle, beating his hands together. '-And for refining every thing and every body to such a state of perfection, that the only trouble in life a person will have in the world, is the trouble of being born.

ALL Persons who have not paid their School Tax, for District No. 7., Newcastle, will please do so immediately to the Subscriber and save expenses.

CHAS. MARSHALL,

'Bless my soul 1 you are joking surely! Why, that beats my invention. I have it in my pocket.--No, no; what did I say?' And Mr. Fangle looked rather wildly around, and clapped his hand to his waiscoat.

'In your pocket!' they all exclaimed. 'Show it, show it!'

'I daren't, I darent; I'm under a bond. Besides it isn't quite complete yet---wants one little screw.'

'A screw loose, eh?' said Frederick, with a sueer.

'I--I shall astonish the world, gentlemen.' proceeded Mr. Fangle.

Oh, certainly, said Frederick

Then, with a look of deep anxiety Mr. Fungle said to Mr. Armstrong. *I went to your office, and I heard you were here. I took the liberty of following you. You will pardon me.' Mr. Armstrong's hand stole Frederick glanced at the clock, into his pocket, and Mr. Fangle oband wished that his visitors would served the action with a sigh of satisfaction. 'May I trespass' once more upon your kindness? I am in great distress---will you lend me half a sovereign?

'No, sir, I don't mean to say that. I am so fond of money that I believe the sun, moon and stars are all cut of the wrong pattern.'

'Why, what pattern would you have them?' asked Richard.

'The pattern in which it was originally intended they should be shaped—that of the almighty dollar.'

'That would do for the States,' said Frederick. 'What would you do for England?'

'I would have the sun and the moon each fashioned to the shape of a fat pound, £, and ail the stars should be cut into little s's and d's to represent the shillings and the pence.'
