

Love in the Steerage.

Many marriages have been solemnized at Castle Garden, New York, since Mr Simpson was placed in control of the landing bureau, but that of yesterday was the most romantic of all.

Catherine Avellaneda, one of the prettiest little women who ever crossed the ocean in a steerage, and said to be descended from Alfonso the Wise King and Leon and Castile in the thirteenth century, was the heroine. She was brought up in luxury and refinement in the city of Malaga in Southern Spain. Her father died some years ago, and since that time she and her mother have been traveling through Europe. A few weeks ago her mother died, and Catherine found that the property had devolved to insignificance. The was at that time in London. Finding that her friends were few when her money was gone, she determined to go to Mexico, where her only living relative, a brother, was located. She did not know exactly where, but she had understood from her mother that he had vast estates somewhere in the southern part of that country. As her little stock of money was rapidly growing less, she concluded to come by steerage, and so she sailed for Liverpool and sailed for New York on the Servia, of the Cunard Line.

On the same vessel was a brawny Scotchman, Robert Mayne, of Inverness, formerly a member of one of the Highland regiments of Her Majesty. His uncle is one of the famous shipbuilders of Aberdeen, and Robert came to this country to take charge of a Scotch colony, lately organized in Wyoming. He also came in the steerage, out of curiosity, and to see how immigrants traveled. The two young people took a violent aversion to each other the first time they met. Catherine is small, delicate, and dainty. Robert is as strong as an ox and nearly as large. The lady thought him rough and uncouth. She understood English, but could not bear his Gaelic accent, and she was terribly annoyed when he paced up and down the deck with each foot, and the rolling of the vessel would make him look as if he were a juggler in a barrel, or as if he were a juggler in a barrel, or as if he were a juggler in a barrel.

One day when the bathing head winds were stronger than usual, a wave struck the vessel with such force that the lady was thrown from her feet. She fainted, and the Scotchman who picked her up, thought that she was dead. Then for the first time he felt a great interest in her, and when she revived he ordered that everything be done for her, and insisted that the straps of her parasol should be opened if any expense was incurred. The unpleasant feeling between the two vanished at once, and when they landed at Castle Garden and the moment for parting arrived neither was ready to go. At length Robert saw the futility of the dilemma. He declared himself and asked her to accompany him to Wyoming as his bride. The fair Castilian was startled by the suddenness of the suggestion, but replied that she always admired Scotchmen, and particularly the Highlanders. Supt. Simpson came to their aid, and a ceremony was performed in proper style, and the late steamer passengers departed in a drawing-room car for Cheyenne, Wyoming.

Not a Book A Cent

Mr Goode, druggist, is not a book agent, but has the agency in Goderich for Johnston's Tonic Bitters, which he can heartily recommend for any complaint to which a tonic medicine is applicable. This valuable medicine has been with most astonishing good results in cases of general debility, weakness, irregularities peculiar to females, extreme paleness, impoverishment of the blood, stomach and liver troubles, loss of appetite, and for that general worn out feeling that nearly every one is troubled with at some part of the year. Don't forget the name Johnston's Tonic Bitters 50c, and $1 per bottle at Goode's drug store, Albion block, Goderich, sole agent.

Retenific.

A prominent gentleman in the neighboring city is always sick by the smell of watermelons. He can detect the odor if one is carried through his house two hours before he comes in. When perceptible to no one else, it makes him dreadfully sick. Speaking of this fact, an engineer on the Hudson River said: "I have had a peculiar experience in reference to poisonous substances. Poison ivy has never injured me, and no external poison that I have ever handled has done me any harm, except in one instance. I once wore a pair of blue overalls, and wore them to go swimming. The blue color came off on my body and poisoned me. I was in such a condition that I had to be lifted from my bed by sheets. Since that time I cannot even put my hands in bluing-water without unpleasant results. In cleansing my engine, if I take up any waste with blue threads in it, I can tell at once from the suffering I experience that there are blue threads in the bundle."

A style of lemon-squeezer has been recently quite extensively used which is made of galvanized iron covered with a coating of zinc. A word of caution should be given against the use of such articles, as the citric acid of the lemon will readily dissolve the zinc forming unwholesome and poisonous salts. Lemon squeezers should be made either of plain iron or wood, or better, like some we have observed, where the services brought contact with the fruit are glass or porcelain. Zinc is a metal which is readily attacked by the weakest acids, and no food or drink should ever be allowed to come contact with it.

Chronic Coughs and Colds

Muir, M. D., L. R. C. P., etc., Toronto, N. S. says: "After three years' experience I consider Scott's Emulsion one of the very best in the market. Very excellent in throat affections. Sold by all druggists, 50c, and $1.00."

How They Bought Him Out.

At least three fourths of the efforts started for the reform of abuses, public or private, when they fail, fail for want of earnest purpose. A cash-boy in a New York store answered a request that any boys or girls should tell of any wrongs which they would try to make right in the year 1883, in this way: "Well, you see, I think swearing 'bout as bad as anything us boys in our store do; swearin' and chawin' tobacco. I don't chew, and lots of us boys don't; but then there's lots that does, little fellers not half as big as me; and some of them do swear awful."

"Do your employers allow it?" asked the editor. "Not if they know it; but you don't suppose they wear at the boss? And then that chews, they don't chew on pay-day."

"And you think this might and ought to be changed?" "Yes, I do; and I thought, after I read 'bout the Reformed Club, that I'd like to join, and so I'd see if I couldn't help stop off the bad talk; and if not other fellers, they're goin' to stop."

"But how did you manage it? I should really like to know." "Well, I just said when I heard 'em 'What d'ye want to say that for?' And then they stared, and said, 'Cos; guess I've got a right to do what I please!' And then I didn't get mad and say, 'No, you ain't, but I said, 'Well, you'd do us good, but I wish you would do it.' And sometimes they laughed, and sometimes they poked fun; but two of 'em swore off, and another one said he would if we'd just let him say 'Jimmy cricks!' And we did; we thought that wasn't swearin' at all."

"So you have three who have given it up?" "Yes and another boy that we bought out."

"Bought out! What do you mean?" "Well, he had the biggest job lot of bad words. Smeared 'em if he had all that had been left over from the whole trade. And we just got him to take account of stock and make a list of his swear-words, and we others that swore off, we formed a company and agreed to buy the lot at five cents apiece. And after we bought 'em they wasn't his to use no more, and so every time he used one of 'em he had to pay two cents."

"But would he tell you?" "Oh, yes. 'Twas 'pon honor, you know; and Jack's a real good feller, and he said he'd like to give it up, only they stuck to him so he couldn't get rid of 'em without givin' 'em away, and we offered to buy 'em all. Wasn't that a pretty good dodge?" "The editor went straight home, and before he took off his overcoat wrote down the 'dodge,' to show the young folks that one boy at least was in earnest about helping himself and others to reform. I do not write his last name, because I know he is in such earnest that he will be glad to have his language corrected by some of the young friends who have not been running to the cry of 'Cash here!' as he has, ever since he was eight years old."

In Better Humour Now.

"My son aged eleven, was cured of an epidemic humor that covered his head and face with sores, by two bottles of Barlock Blood Bitters and Pills," testifies Mrs. Mary Falford, of Pils, Houe, Ont.

Rebuked by a Minister's Wife.

It was in a street car. Three ladies were engaged in conversation. Their subject was church matters and church people. Among the latter was the wife of the pastor of one of the leading Methodist congregations in the city. The ladies said a good many things about her, some flattering and others decidedly otherwise; some things that were true and others that she would not have been willing to admit to be true. For nearly half an hour the gossips plied their questions, and as the interest arose, so did the pitch of their voices. All the time a lady sat opposite them in the car and quietly watched them. When one of the gossips remarked that she had never seen the pastor's wife referred to and the others expressed a desire to see her, the silent watcher smiled. After a while the car reached the point where the lady wished to alight. She arose, but before starting toward the door laid her hand on the arm of one of the three who were engaged in conversation, and, with a self possessed smile, said: "Ladies, you have expressed a desire to see me. Here I am. I have too keen a sense of humor to leave the car without telling you I am the lady you have been talking about. Now, let me give you a little sensible advice. The next time you are in a street car don't talk so loudly, for someone might hear you who would not enjoy it as hugely as I have. Good afternoon."

The lady left the car and the faces of the gossips were a picture of astonishment and discomfiture. The other passengers smiled.—Philadelphia News.

Treatment of Convulsions.

A child in convulsions presents a spectacle which is always terrorizing to its parents. Some are rendered absolutely helpless by paralyzing fear, and many others, even if not so deeply affected, are scarcely less helpless, for the reason that they do not know what to do for the little sufferer. Such attacks come on suddenly, and without warning, and there is always some delay in securing a physician; hence, every mother should know what to do in such cases until he comes.

An attack of convulsions, occurring in a previously healthy child, is rarely fatal; this fact is encouraging. When death results, the chances are that there is some serious disease—as of the brain—present as a complication. The most common cause of convulsions in infancy, induced by improper food. Constipation, also, renders very young children more susceptible to such attacks. There are other causes, such as fright, intense anger, etc., which are capable of inducing convulsions, but the two first mentioned are so much more common, the others need not be described.

When a fit comes on, immediately lay the child on the bed, and undress it as quickly as possible. If the mother is alone, she must do the best she can, but there are always convenient neighbors to render assistance in such emergencies. One should be sent for a physician, another prepare to give the child a hot mustard bath. In the absence of both, a common washing tub will do.

The water should be as hot as can be borne, and, if there is not water enough, fill the tub, so the child, when sitting in it, will be submerged up to the neck. If there is not enough for that, use a dipper, and constantly pour the water over the child's body.

While doing so, keep a towel wrung out of cold water, on the little one's head. Let it remain in the bath from five to ten minutes, then take it out, and, without wiping, wrap it hurriedly in hot blankets, and put it back upon the bed, laying it on its side; if on its back, and it vomits there is danger of strangling. Still keep the cold cloth to the head.

In many cases the convulsions stop under the hot bath, and cold to the head. If they do not, the child must be given an injection of soap and water, unless it is known to have diarrhoea. And here it is well to say, that in every home where there is a child, there should be a syringe kept for just such an emergency.

When the child moves freely, as a rule, the fit begins at once to pass off. When the mother is obliged to wait for water to heat, she should give the injection before the bath. If the water injected comes out nearly clear, use the syringe again.

After this treatment, if the convulsions persist, aside from applying cold constantly to the head, the mother should be more the mother can safely do on her own responsibility; she must wait for the doctor. While the fit is on, the child cannot swallow, and if it is forced into its mouth, they might strangle it. This fact is emphasized, that many people endanger children's lives in that way.

If the mother's treatment is successful, as soon as the convulsions have ceased, and she is certain the child can swallow, she should administer a generous dose of castor oil, if there is reason for her believing that the attack was caused by something it had eaten, or was due to constipation. When in doubt, then give this oil; it would not be likely to do harm in any case.

After a convulsion, a long sleep is necessary to restore the child's bodily shaken nervous system; therefore perfect quiet must be observed. If disturbed, there is danger of it having another fit.—Dr. Frank.

A Professional Opinion.

Rev. F. Gannor, M.D., of Lestow, Ont., says regarding B.B.B. "I have used your excellent Burdock Compound in practice and in my family since 1844, and hold it No. 1 on my list of curative remedies. Your three busy B's are sterling, waken or worry."

Mr. J. M. Morris' house, which is about two miles west of Exeter, was entered by three men in the afternoon last week, and ransacked from top to bottom. All drawers were turned out and the place thoroughly searched. Only the day before there was five hundred dollars in the house and by some way it seems that the strangers must have known this. Mr. Morris on the next day was away with the money to make a payment on his place, in company with his wife and son, leaving at home four of his other children, girls, one sixteen and the others younger. They were in the house at the time it was searched but the men said they would not last them, and so they were after. The house is a long way from any others and this accounts for the daring attempt being made in open day and while Mr. Morris was away. When the thieves failed to get what they were after they looked the doors and took the keys with them. The eldest girl, Deborah, is now at home.

PAIN'S CELERY COMPOUND. ACTS AT THE SAME TIME ON THE NERVES, THE LIVER, THE BOWELS, AND THE KIDNEYS. This combined action gives it wonderful power to cure all diseases. Why Are We Sick? Because we allow the nerves to remain weakened and irritated, and these great organs to become clogged or torpid, and poisonous humors are therefore forced into the blood that should be expelled naturally.

PAIN'S CELERY COMPOUND. WILL CURE BILIOUSNESS, PILES, CONSTIPATION, KIDNEY COMPLAINTS, BRUISES, RHEUMATISM, TISS, NEURALGIA, AND ALL NERVOUS DISORDERS.
