WINNEPEG, Nov. 16.—From the north land has come Edward A. Treble, chief of the United States biological survey, Washington. He outfitted at Vancouver early in the summer, and from there went north to Fort Wrangel, Alaska, and up the Stikine river to Telegraph Creek, where the Treble party outfitted again for the trip to Peace River Crossing, in northern Alberta. He passed the Finlay early in September and found but three prospectors working on the creeks to which the big stampede was made three years ago. Here and there the way was blocked by bush fires, which Mr. Treble reports have done much damage around Fort Graham. Mr. Treble prepared a valuable map of the northern regions through which he passed and which are practically unknown.

Eighty-three People Stranded by Wreck of Portland May Suffer Relief Prevented by Severe Storm

CORONA, Alaska, Nov. 16.—Communication with the eighty-three survivors of the wrecked steamer Portland, who are stranded at Katalina is still cut off. The last message received before the telephone line went down was an appeal for a revenue cutter, but before explanation of the urgency of the request had been made, the line broke and the exact condition of the storm-bound refugees is unknown.

It will be at least four days before relief can be sent. The steams across the Copper River flats are not frozen and it is impossible to send supplies and aid by means of dog teams. The heroic storm that is raging prevents the use of launches. The steamer Alameda, which attempted a rescue of the marooned passengers yesterday morning, was forced to turn back by the storm and is now at Valdez.
